This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE.

ELEVEN years have now elapsed, since the Author of this work published a Lexicon of the New Testament, in the form of a revision and translation of the 'Clavis Philologica' of Wahl, in its first edition. That work was favourably received, as supplying in some degree a want which had long been felt; and the whole edition of fifteen hundred copies was exhausted in a little more than four years.

On returning in 1830 from a residence of several years in Germany, it was the Author's first wish, and perhaps duty, to have immediately prepared another edition of the former work, or a new volume of a similar character. But providential circumstances seemed for a time to call him to other kindred labours; and then sickness intervened; so that it was not until the autumn of 1833, that he was able to give himself in earnest to the preparation of a Lexicon. Since that time his labour upon it has been uninterrupted; so that, comparatively speaking, scarcely a day elapsed, of which the largest portion has not been spent, upon the volume here given to the public.

It was at first supposed, that a revision of the former work was all that would be necessary. But in the lapse of eight years devoted to studies of this nature at home and abroad, the Author's own views and principles in respect to lexicography and philology in general, had naturally become farther developed and in some parts modified. In the same interval, too, the progress of science in this department, as in others, had not ceased to be onward; new editions of the Lexicons of Wahl and Bretschneider had appeared; Winer had pushed his researches further, and brought the results into a better form; and, above all, the labours and improvements of Passow had been spread before the world. In this state of things, an attempt merely to remodel an imperfect foreign work seemed hardly advisable. It appeared therefore to the Author and his friends decidedly preferable, that, calling no man Master on earth, he should go on and prepare from the New Testament itself and from the auxiliary sources, a new and independent work, adapted to the wants of students in our own country. In doing this, he has been able to resort to all the sources from which Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider drew their materials; and while he has freely availed himself of their labours, he has found occasion on every page to distrust their judgment and accuracy, and to turn from them habitually to the original authorities. Accordingly, the present volume is throughout the result of the Author's own investigations; and, with a few slight exceptions, has been sent to the press wholly in manuscript.

A full and scientific Lexicon of any language, embraces a wide field of inquiry. The scholar who would pursue the study of a language critically and philologically, does not rest until he has traced each word to its origin; investigated its primitive form and signification; noted the various forms and senses in which it has been current in the different epochs and dialects of the language, and the manner and order in which all these are deduced from the primitive one and from each other; and, last though not least, has observed the relations in which it stands to other words, in constructions and phrases, and the various modifications which it has undergone in these respects. When all these points are properly ascertained and arranged in his own mind, then, and not till then, is the scholar master of the word in question; and the transcript of the view thus obtained, with the necessary vouchers, is the true lexicography of that word. This is justly termed the historico-logical method of lexicography, which has grown up out of the general progress of philology within the present century, and aims to present a logical and historical view of each word in all its varieties of signification and construction. The first exemplification of it was given by Gesenius, in his Hebrew Lexicon; and it has been ably followed out by Passow in his Lexicon of the Greek language [1].

These remarks proceed upon the supposition, that a language is in itself primitive and independent of every other; and that its words may therefore be traced to their ultimate roots within itself. This indeed is usually assumed in regard to the Greek language: and the Lexicon of Passow is constructed on this principle. But in respect to our own and many other languages, this is obviously not the fact; and the science of comparative philology, which has sprung up within our own days, has already taught us, that both the Greek and Latin are also only members of one great family of languages, which, descending apparently from the mountains of India, have spread themselves over Southern and Western Asia and the whole of Europe; retaining under every diversity of climate and circumstances such obvious affinities, as give undeniable evidence of a common origin. These Indo-European tongues, as they are called, include the Sanscrit, Persian, Greek, Latin, Gothic, German, English, and the other dialects of the Teutonic; and strictly also those of the Slavic and Celtic races. The Semitic languages form a distinct family; though still, in their primary elements, kindred to the former in a greater degree than has usually been supposed. Here too, the first scientific attempt at marking these coincidences as a part of lexicography, has been made by Gesenius, in his Latin Manual of 1833 [of which an English Translation was carried on by Dr. Robinson concurrently with the present work, and was published a few weeks before it. Ed.]; but we apprehend the time to be not far distant, when every Lexicon of the Greek or Latin, or indeed of any of the occidental tongues, will be regarded as incomplete, which shall fail to notice these striking affinities.

In respect to the Greek, it should also be borne in mind, that there are three great epochs which mark the progress of the language; through all or some of which the different meanings and uses of a word may be traced with more or less distinctness.[1] These are its youth, in the heroic or epic poems of Homer and Hesiod, with which may be joined the Ionic prose of Herodotus;—its prime, in the palmy days of Attic elegance and purity, as exhibited in the great tragedians, and in the prose of Thucydides, Xenophon, Plato;—and its decline, after the Macedonian conquest, and still later under the Roman dominion; when the breaking up of the various independent states, the mingling together in armies of soldiers enlisted from every quarter, and the founding of colonies and large cities peopled with inhabitants from every part of Greece and also from foreign lands, could not fail to produce great changes in the language of different communities; which, by natural consequence, would speedily be reflected in the language of books. Thus was formed the later Greek idiom, ἡ κοινὴ διάλεκτος, which every where superseded the pure Attic; and of which Aristotle, Polybius, Diodorus, Plutarch, Ælian, and other later writers, are the representatives. Some of the forms peculiar to this later idiom were ascribed to the influence of the Macedonians, and referred to the Macedonic dialect; or sometimes the same forms were referred to an Alexandrine dialect, inasmuch as the chief seat of the later Greek culture was in Egypt and its metropolis Alexandria. But these terms are probably too specific; and embrace what strictly belonged to the later language of common life in general, rather than to the dialect of any particular tribe or city[2].

The language of the New Testament is the LATER GREEK language, as spoken by foreigners of the Hebrew stock, and applied by them to sub- jects on which it had never been employed by native Greek writers. The simple statement of this fact, suggests at once what the character of this idiom must be; and might, one would think, have saved volumes of controversy. The Jews came in contact with the Greeks only at and after the Macedonian conquests; and were therefore conversant only with the later Greek. They learned it from the intercourse of life, in commerce, in colonies, in cities founded like Alexandria, where the inhabitants were drawn together from Asia as well as from Greece; and it was therefore the spoken language of common life, and not that of books, with which they became acquainted. But they spoke it as foreigners, as Hebrews; and therefore it could not fail to have in general a colouring of the Hebrew, or rather of the later Aramæan, which was their vernacular tongue. Jews who spoke Greek, are called in the New Testament Ἑλληνισταί, Hellenists; and hence in modern usage, since the time of the younger Scaliger, the Jewish Greek has not unaptly been termed Hellenistic [1].

The earliest monument of this idiom is the Version of the Seventy, made at Alexandria, probably at different times during the centuries immediately preceding the Christian era. This, as being a direct translation from the Hebrew, made by Jews, exhibits strongly the influence of the Hebrew, as well as an imperfect knowledge of the Greek; though in various degrees in its different parts. Closely allied to this are the Apocryphal books usually connected with the Septuagint. Meanwhile, the Greek language had become current also in Palestine, along with the Aramæan; partly through frequent intercourse with Hellenistic Jews settled in Egypt and in Asia Minor, who constantly resorted to Jerusalem; and partly from the influence of the Herods and the Roman dominion [2]. Hence the New Testament was written in the now universal tongue. Still later there appeared other Greek Versions of the Old Testament made by Jews; and also the remaining Pseudepigraphic and Apocryphal writings of the Old and New Testaments. Two Jewish writers only, Philo and Josephus, both of them cotemporary with the Apostles, were able to overcome in a great measure the influence of their vernacular tongue; and although when treating of Jewish affairs they necessarily employ many terms belonging to the Jewish Greek, yet in general they approach much nearer to the written idiom of the later Greek, than any of the writers either of the Septuagint or New Testament.

The writers of the New Testament, with the exception of St. Paul, and partially perhaps of St. Luke, were unlearned men; and, like the rest of their countrymen, knew the Greek language only from the intercourse of common life, and not from books. With them, therefore, the Hebrew element which mingled in their idiom would naturally have great prominence; although, since their writings are not translated from a Hebrew original, it is not here so strongly marked as in the Septuagint. It often lies in the turn of the thought, or in the thought itself, rather than in the expression. Even where the expression is modelled after the Hebrew, this is seen more in the construction and connexion of words in phrases and sentences, than as affecting their intrinsic signification. Whoever has himself learned to speak a foreign language, or has closely watched the discourse of foreigners speaking our own tongue, will readily have perceived, that the signification of words is in general much more easily retained and correctly applied, than their forms and their proper construction and connexion. Thus, nothing perhaps imparts more to the Gospels the air of the Hebrew narratives of the Old Testament, than the frequent use of the particle καί as a connective, corresponding to the Hebrew usage of the particle Vav (ו). —From Hebraisms of this kind the writings of St. Paul are comparatively free; since from his birth and residence amid the Greek schools of Tarsus, he probably had acquired a more accurate knowledge of that language than was usual with the Hebrews of Palestine; though the course of his education and the character of his learning were not Greek, but wholly Jewish.

The writers of the New Testament, further, applied the Greek language to subjects on which it had never been employed by native Greek writers. No Native Greek had ever written on Jewish affairs, nor on the Jewish theology and ritual. Hence the Seventy, in their translation, had often to employ Greek words as the signs of things and ideas, which heretofore had been expressed only in Hebrew. In such a case, they could only select those Greek words which most nearly corresponded to the Hebrew; leaving the different shade or degree of signification to be gathered by the reader from the context. Thus, to express the idea of the Hebrew שָׁלוֹם as a word of salutation or farewell, they employ the Greek word εἰρήνη, just as we use the word peace in the same way and for the very same reason. Similar is εὐλογέω for Heb. בָּרַךְ to bless; in Greek writers only to speak well of. Thus far the path was indeed already broken for the writers of the New Testament. But beyond this, they were to be the instruments of making known a new revelation, a new dispensation of mercy to mankind. Here was opened a wide circle of new ideas and new doctrines to be developed, for which all human language was as yet too poor; and this poverty was to be done away (even as at the present day on the discovery and culture of a new science,) chiefly by enlarging the signification and application of words already in use, rather than by the formation of new ones. An example of this in the New Testament is especially the word πίστις,—to which may be added δικαιοσύνη, δικαιοῦσθαι, ἐκλογή, ἀπόστολος, and many others.

The New Testament, then, was written by Hebrews, aiming to express Hebrew thoughts, conceptions, and feelings, in the Greek tongue. Their idiom, consequently, in soul and spirit, is Hebrew; in its external form, Greek, and that more or less pure, according to the facilities which an individual writer might have possessed of acquiring fluency and accuracy of expression in that tongue[1].

The preceding remarks present a summary view of the principles which have guided the Author in the preparation of the present volume. The Greek of the New Testament constitutes but a small portion of the Greek language as a whole; and a Lexicon of it can only aim to give a just exhibition of one of the subordinate forms or phases of that rich and noble tongue. Of such a work, the following, it would seem, ought to be some of the chief traits; and they have accordingly been made prominent objects of attention.

1. The etymology of each word is given, so far as it appertains to the Greek and Hebrew[2], and occasionally the Latin. A general comparison of the affinities between the Greek and other languages, belongs only to a general Lexicon of the language.

2. The full historical view of a word is here out of place; since we strictly have to do only with those significations and constructions which are found in the New Testament itself. But the logical method is still applicable in its full force. This consists in assigning first to each word its primary signification, whether found in the New Testament or not; and then deducing from it in logical order all the significations which occur in the New Testament; but not others, except so far as they may be necessary to illustrate the former[3].—In this connexion, the attempt has every where been made, to discriminate between the intrinsic significations of a word, and those senses in which it may be employed through the force of adjuncts. By referring the latter to their appropriate heads, the multiplicity of meanings given by earlier lexicographers has been greatly diminished.—Particular attention has also been given to bring out to view the force of the prepositions in composition.

3. The various constructions of verbs and adjectives with their cases and with other adjuncts, is in general fully given. Unusual or difficult constructions are noted and explained, by reference both to grammatical rules and to the usage of other writers.

4. The different forms and inflexions of words are exhibited, so far as seemed proper in a Lexicon. Any variety or irregularity of form is, in particular, fully explained.

5. The usage of the writers of the New Testament, is in all cases illustrated by a reference to both the elements of which the New Testament idiom is composed; on the one hand, to the Hebrew element or Jewish Greek; and on the other to the common, or later, idiom of the Greek language. For the former, or Hebrew element, the Version of the Seventy is of the highest importance; since it was probably the only Greek writing with which most of the sacred penmen were acquainted; and many words, phrases, constructions, and even whole passages, are in the New Testament drawn immediately from it. Next in order are the Apocryphal writings connected with the Septuagint; and also the other Greek Versions. Thus far the Concordance of Trommius, and the Lexicons of Biel and Schleusner on the Septuagint, furnish sufficient aid. The works of Philo and Josephus are here of great importance; the latter of whom, especially, contains a treasure of illustration in respect to the facts and antiquities of the New Testament. Valuable, though imperfect, materials from their writings, have been collected in the 'Observationes' of Loesner and Krebs; and one of the many merits of Bretschneider is his frequent (though often faulty) reference to Josephus. The later Apocryphal writings, of both the Old and New Testaments are of value, as throwing light upon the opinions of the later Jews, rather than as illustrating the Scriptural idiom; since they are in a great degree mere servile imitations of the latter.—For the other, or Greek element, reference is made to the prominent writers of the later dialect, in the current editions; and wherever a word belongs also to the Attic epoch, a single reference is usually added to a writer of that age, mostly to Xenophon. Here the Lexicons of single authors, and the collections of Elsner, Kypke, Raphel, and, more than all, of Wetstein, greatly facilitate the labours of a lexicographer of the New Testament.

Let the student not be startled at the apparent multitude of such references, nor think them all of no avail. They are adduced not merely nor mainly to elucidate the meaning of a word; but to show its authority and standing in the Greek language. They serve to show in what relation each word stands to the Septuagint and Jewish writings, and also to the later and Attic Greek; and whether it is common to all or any of them, or found in none. In this way they have an important bearing on the long disputed question of the purity of the New Testament idiom; and aid in determining its true character.

6. So far as the limits of a Lexicon permit, attention has been given to the interpretation of difficult passages; in order that the work may in some measure supply the place of a more extended Commentary.

7. Each article, so far as practicable, contains a reference to every passage of the New Testament in which the word is found. In this way, in more than seven eighths of the words, the Lexicon is a complete Concordance of the New Testament. Those articles in which this is not the case, are marked at the end by the letters AL.—The most sedulous care has been bestowed to verify all the references; and although in a work containing so many thousands of them, some errors are unavoidable, yet it is hoped that the present volume will bear comparison in this respect with any other of a like size and character. The Scriptural references are usually made to the New Testament of Knapp, the Septuagint of Mill, and the Hebrew Bible of Van der Hooght.

Such is the plan of the work now given to the public; to the execution of which the Author has unweariedly devoted the best powers of the best years of his life;—with what success, the theological public must judge. His fervent hope and prayer to God is, that the work may be instrumental in giving facility and impulse to the study of the Holy Scriptures and the pursuit of Sacred Literature; and thus aid in promoting the cause of sacred learning, and Christian piety in our land!

To those friends by whose kind advice and encouragement the Author has been cheered, he tenders his sincere thanks. Among these the Rev. Prof. Stuart has ever been foremost; and I take pleasure in thus testifying my obligations to him. Nor can I pass over the kind offices of another valued friend, the Hon. John Pickering, whose eminence as a Greek scholar and general philologian is known and appreciated throughout Europe, not less than in our own country. His friendly advice and aid have been always at hand; and the stores of his valuable library have been opened to me as freely as if they had been my own. A similar acknowledgement is due also to the Trustees having charge of the Theological Seminary at Andover, who have liberally left in my hands for years all the books I desired from the library of that Institution, the richest in its collections of Sacred Literature which our country yet possesses.

PREFACE

BY

THE EDITOR.

In bringing before the Public the present work, (which, at the desire of some eminent Biblical Scholars I have undertaken to edit,) it may be proper for me, first to advert to the plan and contents of the work itself, and offer some remarks on the statement of the above as given by Dr. Robinson in his Preface; and secondly, to specify my own share in it, in thus preparing it for the use of this country; and the improvements I have been enabled to introduce therein.

Dr. Robinson's work originated in a far less perfect one which preceded it—an English Translation of the First Edition of the Latin Clavis Philologica of Wahl. The present he announces as "an entirely new one, formed, independently of any preceding Lexicons, from the N. T. and the various auxiliary sources," meaning the Classical and Rabbinical writers, and the Philological Commentators on the N.T. At the same time, Dr. Robinson admits that he has "freely availed himself of the labours of his predecessors, Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider; though he has every where seen reason to distrust their accuracy, and turn to the original authorities;" and upon the whole, that "the work is throughout the result of his own investigations." This language is somewhat vague and indefinite, and might be thought to contain, on the part of Dr. Robinson, a claim to be considered as an altogether original Lexicographer, but that the circumstance of his having, in his first work, merely translated Wahl, and in the present "made free use of the labours of Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider in his second Edition," excludes the idea of originality in its strict sense; which, indeed, at this time of day, would be, in Lexicography, almost unattainable, or if attained, would fall short of the just expectations of the Public; which naturally prefers the Lexicon that contains the most information,—from whatever quarter derived,—and is quite indifferent as to the originality of the matter placed before it. Accordingly, when Dr. Robinson speaks of his work being "formed independently of all other Lexicons, and the whole as being the result of his own investigations," we must suppose him to merely claim that qualified kind of originality, which arises from every where exercising his own judgment, after reference, when necessary, to the original authorities, as to the statements made by his learned and diligent predecessors, and from his frequently adding matter out of his own stores, whether collected from other quarters, or the fruits of his own study and reflection; or, as in most cases, by giving the same materials, when advisable, another form, and moulding them according to his own views; or, finally, by his having somewhat enlarged the plan, and included certain particulars which had not been previously comprehended in any Lexicon. In fact, Dr. Robinson's work, though it be, to a considerable degree, only a very careful and able Rifacimento of all the most valuable matter to be found in the Lexicons of Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider, yet it is enriched by the introduction of several new features, and by the accession of much valuable additional matter derived either from the best German Philologists, for the seven or eight years which have elapsed since the time of Wahl and Bretschneider (especially Oldhausen, Schott, Thiel, Winer, Bernardy and Passow)—together with the results of his own continued study of the Scriptures, under the guidance of strong natural talent, and with the advantage of no inconsiderable acquirements in Classical literature. It will also be found that he has every where evinced his sound judgment, both by the abler disposition of the materials he derived from his predecessors, and, especially, in more skilfully classifying the different significations; wherein consists one of the most arduous of the many labours of the Lexicographer. And here the Lexicon of Dr. Robinson is in strong contrast with those in general use within a period which some persons even yet remember. A paucity of senses, a want of due discrimination between the various significations of the same word, and a poverty of illustration by examples, whether Scriptural or Classical, were faults (chiefly owing to the imperfect state of Scripture Interpretation) common to all the earlier Lexicons of the New Testament, and which continued down to the middle of the last century; when improvements were first introduced by Stockius, and continued by Schoettgen, Krebs, Spohn, and Parkhurst. But the deficiencies in question were only effectually removed by the learned and indefatigable Schleusner, partly from the suggestions of the learned J. G. Fischer, in his Prolusiones de Lexicorum vitiis, Lips. 1791, 8vo. Yet since men, alas, (in the words of the Poet,) "vitia dum vitant,—in contraria currunt," so Schleusner ran into the other extreme. Instead of confounding together into one the various senses of the same word, he often, most injudiciously, multiplied those senses, not distinguishing between the senses inherent in the words themselves, and those which they derive from adjuncts, or from the context. Moreover, though indefatigable in collecting materials, he was not always careful, or skilful, enough in working them up; and he wanted that nice discrimination of Greek idiom, and those enlarged views of the language, which so eminently distinguished the great Grecians from the time of Bentley and Hemsterhusius to the present day [1]. Accordingly, his articles on Prepositions and Particles have a decided inferiority to the rest of the work. These defects were distinctly seen by Wahl, who set himself to reform them in a new Lexicon, which should avoid the prolixity of his predecessors, and supply what the advanced state of Greek Philology required, agreeably to the principles developed by Planck in his Tract on the nature of the N. T. style. Accordingly, his Clavis Philologica presents, especially in its 2d Edition, a greatly improved arrangement of the senses of words, and a far more enlightened mode of treating on the Prepositions and Particles; and also, by the aid of Matthiæ, Buttmann, Thiersch, Rost, and Winer, a marked improvement in handling matters of syntax, construction, and all the nicer idioms of the Greek language.

Yet here again there is a use and an abuse; and nothing is easier than to err by running into extremes, either on the one hand in referring every thing to Hebraism, or unscientifically treating on the phraseology; or, on the other hand, by running into too great refinements on Grecism, which are out of place in treating on the popular diction of the New Test. [2] With this is closely connected another fault into which all German Philologists fall,—and from which Dr. Robinson

[1] A constellation of great names, including those of Kuster, Reiske, Ernesti, Toup, Markland, Ruhnken, Valcknaer, Wyttenbach, Heyne, Porson, Hermann, Parr, Burney, Blomfield, Elmsley, Dobree, Astius, Wolf, Lobeck, Matthæi, Poppo, Schæfer, Schweighæuser, Fritzsche, Dindorf, Bekker, and others. Who can survey the immense pile of verbal criticism, of the most enlightened kind, raised by the hands of these distinguished persons, and not see that it had been strange indeed if Biblical Criticism and Interpretation had not largely benefited by the examples thus set in Classical? In their profound researches and discoveries (to use the words of Mr. Mitchell, in his Notes on the Wasps of Aristophanes) "have been forged the golden keys, which unlock treasures infinitely more precious than any thing which Greece or Rome has left us; and in this sense, Philology, though habitually building her nest upon the earth, is found like the songster, who also builds his nest there, bearing her wings and notes to the very gates of heaven."

[2] It has been well observed by Bretschneider, in the Preface to his Second Edition, p. 11. "Recentiorum interpretum nonnulli nimii esse videntur in judicanda dictione N. T. secundum subtilitatem grammaticam illam, ad quam Hermannus, Matthiæ, Buttmannus, aliique linguæ Græcæ doctores clarissimi, dictionem scriptorum profanorum nuper exegerunt. Illos enim nimios esse in studio ejiciendorum e N. T. Hebraismorum et revocandæ dictionis scriptorum sacrorum ad sermonem profanorum, ideoque haud raro verbis N. himself is not wholly free, prolixity. One cannot but wonder at the want of judgment, which could induce them to enter into such minute Philological details, and make such a formidable array of Critics, sometimes on matters of but slender importance. Would that the laborious scholars of Germany, and their followers in other countries, could see how useless it is to pile up such masses;—for, as Horace has well said,

"Omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat."

And as shrewdly as truly Voltaire: "Le secret d'ennuyer est celui de tout dire." In the case of Wahl, the effect of this prolixity is especially unfavourable,—since, to save that space, which is too much occupied by such minute Grammatical discussions, he curtails matter of far greater moment,—giving general references to the Classical writers in the place of citations from them, and references to passages of Scripture instead of adducing the words. The contrary to all which forms the great advantage of Schleusner's Lexicon; where all the most important materials for judgment are placed before the reader; who, from the fulness of citation, possesses almost the advantage of a Lexicon.

Of the above defects the first mentioned were distinctly seen by the acute and learned Bretschneider, who, especially in the second Edition of his Lexicon, has often improved on Wahl by somewhat lessening the number of senses in words of very extensive signification, and, in general, by studying greater simplicity,—often with success. Though he, on his part, often pursues an arrangement too logical, and aims at an accuracy too strictly philosophical to suit the popular cast of Scripture phraseology; not to say that it is difficult to chain down so fleeting a thing as language to any such formal arrangement. Accordingly though that Lexicographer has rendered considerable service by often presenting a more simple, natural, and regular arrangement of the senses, yet, after all, his chief merit consists in his having brought forward a great body of very valuable illustrations of the phraseology of the New Testament from the Apocryphal and Pseudepigraphic writings of the Old and New Testament, and from Philo and Josephus, (of whom the latter author comes next in value to the Septuagint) as also from the most ancient Ecclesiastical writers, who used the same common dialect with the writers of the New Testament, or who formed their language upon the model of those writers.

Between the extremes above adverted to Dr. Robinson has, with admirable judgment, steered the middle and only safe course. And while he has profited very largely by both Wahl and Bretschneider (taking the illustrations of the latter from the Apocryphal writers, Josephus, and the writings of the Apostolic Fathers almost en masse) he has worked up the materials for Lexicography in a manner superior to either; presenting not unfrequently a better arrangement of senses, and carrying classification, with reference to the application of words, yet farther[1]. He has also endeavoured to give his work a value above theirs by introducing features hitherto found in no Lexicon of the New Testament. Besides entering more largely into the interpretation of passages of controverted sense, he has aimed at making the work serve the purpose of a Concordance; and he not only enters into matters of Criticism as to Various Readings, but he even discusses the discrepancies between the Quotations from the Old Testament and the present reading of the Sept. or Hebrew original. It may, however, be doubted whether these deviations in plan from that of other Lexicons were in all respects well judged; for, as the very nature of the work must forbid that wide scope necessary to the satisfactory discussion of such difficult and intricate questions,—it were better to omit what cannot, after all, be adequately accomplished. The provinces, indeed, of the Commentator, or Critic, and of the Lexicographer are properly quite distinct, and are better kept so[2]. The attempt to make a LEXICON serve also the purpose of a Concordance, has been BEFORE tried, but never with success; nor can Dr. Robinson's be said to have succeeded,—since to make his work a real Concordance, the words of the passages should have been introduced, and not, as generally, mere references to them. Again, discussions on Various Readings are somewhat out of place in a Lexicon; and disquisitions on questions so intricate as the discrepancies in the Quotations,—which are too extensive for even the Commentator,—are peculiarly unsuited to the Lexicographer. In short, the attempt to introduce such a variety of matter into a Lexicon has swelled the present work to somewhat too great a bulk. Dr. Robinson will, in a 2d Edition, do well to disencumber his work of all extraneous matter, in order to allow more room for things; for if on any writer, a Lexicographer on the N. T. is bound to bear in mind the ancient saying, that "words are the daughters of earth, while things are the sons of heaven." And though it cannot be expected, that in a Dictionary, much doctrinal or practical matter can be introduced, yet it need not be excluded alto-

[1] The reader will be particularly interested with the articles on the names of places, which contain much valuable information. In drawing up these Dr. Robinson was greatly aided by Rosenmuller's admirable 'Biblical Geography.' Besides he had the advantage of much valuable information, collected by him, for the use of his new Edition of Calmet's Dictionary.

[2] The great object of a Lexicon of the N. T. is not a Commentary. Its chief purpose is to serve as an instrument in the hands of the student, by which he may be aided in the ascertaining the sense, in a manner partly similar to, but partly different from, the help which he derives from a Concordance; so as in some measure to, practically, form out of the matter a sort of Commentary for himself, without that bias which is often found in Expositors. For the Lexicographer should, above all things, hold the scales of critical decision free from any bias. His purpose should not be to systematize; still less to dogmatize. And though he has some means of discovering the truth, which may escape the Commentator, yet he ought not to arbitrarily determine the sense of a passage against the general voice of Expositors.

gether, as is the case in the Lexicons of Schleusner, Wahl, and Bretschneider. If, however, in Dr. Robinson's, there be too limited a portion of the above matter, yet it must be acknowledged that there is every where an air of seriousness, and a spirit of piety, which raise it exceedingly above the works just mentioned. To perceive how far it rises in soundness of doctrine above those, may be seen by referring to the article πνεῦμα. It is true that amidst the immense mass of matter contained in this bulky Volume, some has found place which had better have been excluded; a few views of interpretation and opinions in Theology have been brought forward, which, though only reported, not approved by, the Author (and therefore certainly not to be considered as conveying his sentiments) had better have been altogether omitted.

The reader will feel peculiarly interested in the statement given by Dr. Robinson in his judicious Preface of the Rules by which he has been guided in drawing up his work, and especially with some instructive matter on the nature of the New Testament diction, and the causes which led to the deterioration of the pure Greek idiom, from the time of Alexander downwards. In most of what is there said I entirely coincide; but on a few matters, must confess I hesitate. A cloud yet partially overhangs this long litigated subject, which, on some future occasion, I shall endeavour, as far as may be practicable, to dissipate. The reader will not fail to perceive that the views entertained by Dr. Robinson on the nature of Scripture language are quite inconsistent with that Verbal inspiration of the Sacred writers which is so strenuously contended for by some [1].

But, to proceed to notice what I have done in the discharge of my Editorial duty, and especially for the improvement of the work. In the first place I have carefully revised the whole of the matter; and after preparing it for the press (with the insertion of whatever I thought necessary in the way of correction, addition, and animadversion), I have gone through the proof sheets myself; and I trust the work will be found very [1] On this deeply important subject the reader is referred to an admirable work recently given to the public by the Rev. Dr. Henderson, principal Tutor of the Theological College at Highbury; forming the fourth series of the Congregational Lectures, and treating on the subject of Divine Inspiration, or the supernatural influence exerted in the communication of Divine truth, and its especial bearing on the Composition of the Sacred Scriptures. Of these Lectures the 5th and 6th contain the grounds for our belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures, while the 7th and 8th discuss the nature and extent of that inspiration. To the views there propounded the Editor accords his entire concurrence; and he feels assured that no well-informed or well-principled persons, of whatever denomination of professing Christians, —at least of those who hold the vital doctrines of the Gospel,—can be otherwise than gratified to see in Dr. Henderson's work that rare admixture of great learning and extensive research, with unaffected modesty and candour, and deep spirituality;—of enlightened views, with soundness of doctrine and sobriety of thought,—which remind us of the good old times of our Theology, when "there were giants in the land."

free from typographical errors. In that, as well as its other merits, extrinsic and intrinsic, it will, I apprehend, be found to more than compete with the original Edition. For notwithstanding the general correctness of Dr. Robinson's work, yet amidst such an immense mass of learned matter, not a few errors, especially in Greek words, have been discovered and corrected. With respect to the References to Scripture, though the time would not permit me to check them systematically,—yet from having here and there tried their accuracy, I have reason to think them very correct. As to the citations from the Classical writers, though I could not verify them, yet wherever I had the least reason to suspect an error to exist, I did not fail to check the passage with the original in the best Editions, and was thereby enabled to remove some errors, or supply what was left incomplete, either in sense or construction.

Moreover, wishing to adapt the work as much as possible to the British public, I have systematically removed those harsh abbreviations which, however customary in Germany or America, would not be tolerated in this country.

With the same view, I have changed a few Americanisms into the current English of our own country. And further, since Dr. Robinson, in his attention to matters of greater moment (or, from his being so conversant with Latin works, in the formation of his own,) had left the style here and there stiff and neglected, I have undertaken, in a few cases, to remove obscurities, dismiss what might seem pedantic or too technical expressions[1], soften ruggedness, and expand too great brevity—and in short have employed a little of that limæ labor which Dr. Robinson will, no doubt, bestow on a second edition. In most cases, however, a change has been only suggested in a word or sentence, or what seemed wanting to the sense, supplied by an insertion, in either case within brackets. Moreover, in important cases, such as to call forth an illustration or criticism, I have interwoven matter; but always within brackets. In order, however, to make up for the room lost by expansion and insertion, and keep the work within due limits, I have sometimes (though rarely) ventured to cancel small portions which could well be dispensed with; e. g. here and there an Etymology manifestly erroneous, or a few references to books and tracts, German and American, not found in this country, or to such English works as, from being in continual use among students, would be resorted to without any reference, e. gr. Adam's Roman Antiquities, and Potter's Grecian Antiquities. Also a few citations from the Greek Lexicographers, in cases where, from the matter in question being proved by the direct evidence of Classical writers, such indirect testimony was useless. Could I have felt myself authorized, I might with advantage have gone further: for that the Greek Lexicographers have often been so used by the foreign Commentators as to be abused, there can be no doubt; though the proper limits had been ably marked out by J. A. Ernesti, in a learned Prolusio de Glossariorum Græcorum vera indole et recto usu in interpretatione Novi Test. Lips. 1742. Moreover, not a few references to the Sept., or statements of Hebrew words corresponding to Greek ones in the Sept., might have been dispensed with; for however important that Version may be to the understanding of the language of the New Testament, yet here also there is a use and an abuse: and certain it is that it has been not a little abused by a certain class of interpreters, who are every where seeking Hebraisms, almost to the exclusion of Grecism. Finally, a very few mere excrescences have been expunged, especially when introduced contrary to the Author's own rule, of excluding matter which has no reference to the N. T., and belongs only to a general Greek Lexicon.

[1] Thus I have altered Trop. into Figur. or Fig.; for though the sense of the two terms be essentially the same, the latter is the plainer and perhaps more proper term. See Bp. Marsh's Lect. P. III. 67.

In respect to the arrangement of significations, especially as to the mode in which they arise one out of another, there will be found something in this new Edition, I trust not wholly unimportant, contributed in the way of improvement; for, after all that had been effected by Dr. Robinson in amendment of Wahl and Bretschneider, yet not a little yet remained to be done to make the Classification perfect. All that the time would now permit me to do, was to supply by insertion within brackets, what seemed requisite to complete the arrangement adopted by Dr. Robinson. And in order to make that arrangement more distinct to the eye, (and through it to the mind,) I have frequently employed capital letters, or italics, as occasion required. In short, I have neglected nothing, short of direct alteration, that could tend to present the matter, of every kind, throughout the whole work, in a distinct and intelligible shape: and accordingly I have never hesitated to adopt a change of punctuation, wherever it would make the sense plainer.

And now I have only to express my fervent wishes that a work which unites in itself so many excellencies, may obtain that wide circulation, which its merits may justly claim. The author is fully entitled to the warm thanks of all persons, of every denomination of professing Christians, who uniting knowledge to piety and zeal, take an interest in the correct interpretation of the Revealed Word; assured, that such is the only means, under Divine Providence, to banish strange doctrines contrary to that Word,—and, under the teaching of the Spirit promised to "guide us into all truth," to make us to be "all of the same mind in Christ Jesus."

20 miles N. W. from Damascus, towards Heliopolis or Baalbeck; and often named Ἀβίλη τοῦ Λυσανίου to distinguish it from others. This territory had formerly been governed as a tetrarchate by a certain Lysanias, the son of Ptolemy, and grandson of Mennæus (Jos. Ant. 14. but 13. 3.) He was put to death (A. C. 36.) through the intrigues of Cleopatra, who took possession of his province. (ib. 15. 4. 1.). After her death it fell to Augustus, who hired it out to a certain Zenodorus; but as he suffered the country to be infested with robbers, the province was taken from him and given to Herod the Great (Jos. B. J. 1. 20. 4. comp. Ant. 15. 10. 1.). At Herod's death a part of the territory was given to Philip (Ant. 17. 11. 4.); but the greater part, with the city Abila, seems then, or afterwards, to have been bestowed on another Lysanias, Luke 3. 1. who is by some supposed to be a descendant of the former, but is no where mentioned by Josephus. Indeed nothing is said either by him, or any other profane writer, of this part of Abilene, until about ten years after the time referred to by Luke, when Caligula gave it to Agrippa Major as ἡ τετραρχία Λυσανίου (Ant. 18. 6. 10.); to whom it was afterwards confirmed by Claudius (ibid. 19. 5. 1.). Ἅγιος, ία, ιον, a word rarely found in Attic writers, who prefer ἁγνός, but used every where in the Sept. for קָדוֹשׁ and קֹדֶשׁ. Hence the primary idea is pure, clean, (see Gesen. After the Captivity, Egypt became a place of resort to great numbers of the Jews, who settled there either of their own accord, or from the invitations and encouragements held out by Alexander the Great and the Ptolemies; so that, in the reign of Ptolemy Philopater, they were able to erect a temple at Leontopolis similar to the one at Jerusalem, and to establish in it all the rites of their paternal worship; see Jos. 25. But as נָשָׂא עָוֹן etc. often means to bear the punishment of sin, as Lev. 5. 17. Num. 5. 31 : 14. 33. al. (Sept. λαβεῖν, ἀναφέρειν,) and as αἴρειν often has in the Sept. the sense to bear, as above, we may here also admit for αἴρειν the sense to bear the punishment of sin, which is elsewhere expressed in the N. T. by βαστάζειν, ἀναφέρειν, etc. comp. Matt. 8. 17. 1 Pet. 2. 24. Or perhaps the sensus prægnans is better, viz. to take away by taking upon one's self.

4. to take away, to remove, simply, the idea of lifting, etc. being dropped; usually with the notion of violence, authority, etc.

'in his humiliation and oppression was his sentence; he was taken away,' or hurried away to death; comp. Is. 53. 8. and see Hengstenberg in Christol. and in Bibl. Rep. II. p. 357. and Kuinoel in loc. Others, his punishment was taken away. So Sept. for אֻמַּץ Is. 57. 1, 2. גָּוַר Is. 53. 8. 'Ακρογωνιαῖος, α, ον, (ἄκρον and γωνία angle,) spoken of a stone, λίθος, a corner-stone, i. e. foundation-stone, Eph. 2. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 6, comp. Is. 28. 16. Matt. 21. 42, but this is the top-stone or coping. —Our Lord is compared in N. T. to a foundation corner-stone, in two different points of view. First, as this stone lies at the foundation, and gives support and strength to the building, so Christ, or the doctrine of a Saviour, is called ἀκρογωνιαῖος, i. e. λίθος, Eph. 2. 20. because this doctrine is the most important feature of the Christian religion, and is the foundation of all the precepts given by the apostles and other Christian teachers. Further, as the corner-stone occupies an important and honourable place, Jesus Christ is compared to it, 1 Pet. 2. 6. because God has made Him distinguished, and has advanced Him to a dignity and conspicuousness above all others.—The word occ. in Barnab. Ἀμήν, amen, Heb. אָמֵן which is strictly an adj. true, certain, faithful; as אֱלֹהֵי אָמֵן Sept. Θεὸς ἀληθινός, Is. 65. 16. But the Heb. word אָמֵן occurs often in O. T. as an adverb, truly, surely, certainly; usually at the end of a sentence, where it serves to confirm the words which precede, and invoke the fulfilment of them in the sense, So be it, fiat, Sept. ἀμήν or γένοιτο. Thus in oaths or imprecations, where the people answer אָמֵן, and thereby bind themselves, Neh. 5. 13, Sept. ἀμήν. Deut. 27. 15—26, Sept. γένοιτο. Or in praising God, when the assembly respond to the reader or choir, אָמֵן, as Ps. 41. 14: 72. 19: 89. 53, Sept. ἀμήν, comp. 1 Chr. 16. 36 et Neh. 8. 6, Sept. ἀμήν. Ps. 106. 48, Sept. γένοιτο. Or lastly by individuals, after an imprecation, Num. 5. 22, Sept. γένοιτο, or to a command, 1. K. 1. 36, Sept. γένοιτο. More rarely אָמֵן stands in O. T. at the beginning of a sentence, for the sake of emphasis, assuredly, verily, in truth, Sept. ἀληθῶς Jer. 28. 6, and also אָמְנָה Sept. ἀληθῶς, Josh. 7. 20, comp. Job 19. 5.—Hence in N. T.

Ἀμώμητος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, adj. (α priv. and μωμάομαι to blame,) blameless, irreprehensible, Phil. 2. 15. 2 Pet. 3. 14.—Cyrill. Alex. on Is. 53, ἀμώμητος παντελῶς ἐν ἡμῖν οὐδείς. id. in Is. 54. Hom. Il. 12. 109.

Ἄμωμον, ου, τό, amomum, an odoriferous plant or seed, used in preparing precious ointment. It differed from the modern amomum of chemists' shops, but the exact species is not known; see Rees' Cyclop.—Rev. 18. 13 in the later editions.

Ἄμωμος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, adj. (α priv. and μῶμος,) spotless, without blemish.

a) pr. 1 Pet. 1. 19 ἀμνοῦ ἀμώμου, spoken metaph. of Christ, a lamb without blemish, as was required by the Levitical law in regard to all victims; see Lev. 1. 10: 22. 19—22, where Sept. for תָּמִים. So Heb. 9. 14.—Test. XII. Patr. Fabr. Cod. Pseud. I. p. 724.

Ἀμών, ὁ, indec. Amon, Heb. אָמוֹן (opifex), pr. name of a king of the Jews; see 2 K. 21. 18 sq. 2 Chr. 33. 20 sq. —Matt. 1. 10 bis.

Ἀμώς, ὁ, indec. Amos, Heb. אָמוֹץ (strong), pr. name of a man, Luke 3. 25.

I. Ἄν, a PARTICLE used with the Opt. Subj. and Indic. moods; sometimes properly rendered by perhaps; but more commonly not to be expressed in English by any corresponding particle, and only giving to a proposition or sentence a stamp of uncertainty and mere possibility, and indicating a dependence on circumstances. In this way it serves to modify or strengthen the intrinsic force of the Opt. and Subj. while it can also, in like manner, affect the signification of the Indicative (the pres. and perf. excepted) and other verbal forms. This particle stands after one or more words in a clause, and is thus distinguished from ἄν for ἐάν; see the next article. For the general use and power of ἄν in Classical writers and in N. T. see Buttm. § 139. 5 sq. Matth. § 598—600. Hermann de Part. ἄν, and ad Viger. p. 812—822. Winer Gr. § 43.—In N. T. the use of ἄν is generally conformed to that of Classical writers, but sometimes not.

I. As conformed to Classical usage.

1. With the OPTATIVE, in a clause not dependent, it indicates that the supposition or possibility expressed by the simple Opt. will, under the circumstances implied by ἄν, be realized. Hence it is found

a) in vows, wishes, etc. once, Acts 26. 29 εὐξαίμην ἂν τῷ Θεῷ, I could pray to God, and under the circumstances do pray to him.—So βουλοίμην ἄν Xen. Mem. 3. 5. 1. Plato Lys. p. 228. See Matth. § 514. c.

b) in interrogations, direct or indirect, where the thing inquired about is possible, or certain, but the inquirer is uncertain when or how it is to take place. Luke 1. 62 τί ἂν θέλοι καλεῖσθαι αὐτόν; how he might wish him to be called? i. e. since he was to have a name, what that name should be. Luke 9. 46. John 13. 24. Acts 2. 12: 5. 24: 17. 18: 21. 33. al.—Jos. Ant. 8. 14. 2. Xen. Mem. 2. 1. 24. Anab. 7. 6. 6.

2. With the SUBJUNCTIVE in relative clauses and connected with relative words, which thus are rendered more general and indicate mere possibility; Buttm. § 139. 8. For ἄν thus used, the sacred writers often put ἐάν, q. v.

a) with relative pronouns or particles, where ἄν implies some condition, or uncertainty whether or where the thing will take place. etc. Lat. cunque, ever, soever, etc. Thus (α) ὃς ἄν, whoever, whosoever, Matt. 5. 21, 31, 32: 10. 11: 12. 32. Mark 3. 29. John 1. 33. et sæpiss.—Sept. Dan. 3. 5, 6.—(β) ὅστις ἄν, whosoever, Matt. 10. 33. Luke 10. 35. John 2. 5. Acts 3. 23. sæp.—(γ) ὅσος ἄν, whosoever, Matt. 7. 12: 21. 22. Mark 3. 28. John 11. 22. Acts 2. 39. sæp. see also II. 1, below.—Esdr. 8. 24: 9. 4.—(δ) ὅπου ἄν, wheresoever, Mark 9. 18: 14. 9. Luke 9. 57. Rev. 14. 4. See also in II. 1.—(ε) ὡς ἄν, as, in whatever manner, etc. 1 Thess. 2.

7 ὡς ἂν τροφὸς θάλπῃ τὰ τέκνα.—Soph. Ajax. 1096.

b) with particles of time, conjunctions, etc.—(α) ἕως ἄν, until, the time when being indefinite, Matt. 2. 13 ἴσθι ἐκεῖ ἕως ἂν ε�ίπω σοι. 5. 18, 26: 10. 11, 23. Mark 6. 10. Luke 20. 43. Acts 2. 35. sæp.—Diod. Sic. 3. 9. Xen. Anab. 5. 1. 11.—So ἄχρις οὗ ἄν, 1 Cor. 11. 26: 15. 25.—(β) ἡνίκα ἄν, whenever, as soon as, indefinite, 2 Cor. 3. 16.—Sept. Deut. 7. 12. Judith 14. 2. Jos. Ant. 5. 1. 2. Xen. Cyr. 1. 2. 4.—(γ) ὡς ἄν, when, as soon as, indefinite, 1 Cor. 11. 34 ὡς ἂν ἔλθω, when I shall come, i. e. but I know not when this will be [Qu?]. Phil. 2. 23.—(δ) ὁσάκις ἄν, so often as, however often, 1 Cor. 11. 25.

c) with the illative particle ὅπως, that, in order that; and ὅπως ἄν, that at some time or other, that sooner or later, etc. Luke 2. 35. Acts 3. 19: 15. 17. Rom. 3. 4. Sept. for לְמַעַן Ps. 51. 6.

3. With the INDICATIVE, in the historical tenses, (but not in the primary ones,) ἄν is used in the apodosis of a conditional sentence in which εἰ precedes, and indicates that the thing in question would have taken place, if that which is the subject of the protasis, had also taken place; but that in fact neither the one nor the other has taken place. Matt. 11. 21 εἰ ἐν Τύρῳ ἐγένοντο αἱ δυνάμεις—πάλαι ἂν ἐν σάκκῳ καὶ σποδῷ μετενόησαν, if these miracles had been done in Tyre, they would have repented; but the miracles were not done, and they did not repent. Luke 19. 23. John 4. 10: 9. 41. Heb. 4. 8. John 8. 42 εἰ ὁ Θεὸς πατὴρ ὑμῶν ἦν, ἠγαπᾶτε ἂν ἐμέ, if God were your father, ye would love me; but neither is true. So Matt. 11. 23: 12. 7: 23. 30: 24. 22, 43. Mark 13. 30. John 11. 21. Rom. 9. 29. 1 Cor. 2. 8: 11. 31. Gal. 1. 10. 1 John 2. 19. al. sæp.—Wisd. 11. 25. Jos. Ant. 7. 4. 2. Xen. Mem. 4. 2. 24. ib. 1. 1. 5. Apol. 8.

II. The following are departures from Classical usage, viz.

1. When, in relative clauses, a relative pronoun with ἄν is followed by the Indicative; here the Classical writers employ the Subj. or Opt. This occurs in N. T. when a thing is spoken of as actually taking place, not at a definite time or in a definite manner, but as often as opportunity presents itself, etc. It is thus found only with a preterite. Mark 6. 56 καὶ ὅσοι ἂν ἥπτοντο αὐτοῦ, and as many as, however many, touched him. ib. ὅπου ἂν εἰσεπορεύετο εἰς κώμας, and wheresoever he entered, etc. Acts 2. 45: 4. 35. 1 Cor. 12. 2 πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα, ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε, ἀπαγόμενοι, led away to idol-worship, just as ye happened to be led, i. e. I do not say by whom or how.—Sept. Gen. 2. 19. Lev. 5. 3. and in later Greek writers, e. g. Agath. 32. 12: 117. 12: 287. 13.—Once with the pres. Indic. Mark 11. 24 πάντα ὅσα ἂν προσευχόμενοι αἰτεῖσθε, where Mss. read αἰτῆσθε in the Subjunct. So Luke 8. 18: 10. 8. in the earlier editions. See Winer § 43. 3.

2. As an adv., or rather in a false construction, perhaps, possibly. So once before an Infin. 2 Cor. 10. 9 ἵνα μὴ δόξω, ὡς ἂν ἐκφοβεῖν ὑμᾶς, which is probably to be resolved by ὡς ἂν ἐκφοβοῖμι ὑμᾶς, as if I wished to terrify you; comp. Plat. Crit. p. 44. B, πολλοῖς δόξω, ὡς—ἀμελήσαιμι. Winer § 43. 6.—Once also without any mood, 1 Cor. 7. 5 μὴ ἀποστερεῖτε ἀλλήλους, εἰ μή τι ἂν [γένοιτο] ἐκ συμφώνου πρὸς καιρόν, unless perhaps by mutual consent. Winer § 43. 1. AL.

II. Ἄν, as a CONJUNCTION, contr. fr. ἐάν, if, & distinguished from the radical ἄν of the preceding art., by being put at the beginning of a proposition or clause. See Buttm. § 139. 8. Herm. ad Viger. p. 822. In N. T. John 20. 23 bis.—Jos. Ant. 4. 4. 4. ib. 4. 8. 15. Xen. Cyr. 3. 1. 42.

Ἀνά, prep. governing, in Greek poets, the Dat. on, upon, in, Hom. Il. 1. 15; but in prose writers the Accus. on, in, as ἀνὰ στόμα ἔχειν, to have always in the mouth. See Buttm. § 147. n. 2. Vigerus p. 574 sq. and Herm. ib. p. 855. In N. T. only with an accus., in two significations, viz.

1. with its accus., it forms a periphrase for an adverb; e. g. ἀνὰ μέρος, by turns, alternately, 1 Cor. 14. 27.—

Ἀπό, Prep. governing the genitive. Like ἐκ, παρά, and ὑπό, it expresses what is strictly the idea of the genitive case itself, (Buttm. § 132. 2,) viz. the going forth or proceeding of one object FROM another. Ἀπό is used of such objects as before were on, by, or with, another, but are now separated from it; (not in it, for to this ἐκ corresponds;) either in respect of place, time, origin, or source, etc. Its general meaning is therefore from, away from, of, etc. Sept. for מִן perpetually.

Ἀποσυνάγωγος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, adj. (ἀπό and συναγωγή,) excluded from the synagogue, i. e. excommunicated, John 9. 22: 12. 42: 16. 2. There were three species of this excommunication, viz. נִדּוּי, חֵרֶם, שַׁמָּתָא. The first continued for one month, and prohibited a person from bathing, from shaving his head, or from approaching any person nearer than four cubits; but if he submitted to this, he was not debarred the privilege of attending the sacred rites. The second involved an exclusion from the sacred assemblies, was accompanied with heavy maledictions, and prohibited all intercourse with the person subjected to it. The last species was a perpetual exclusion from all the rights and privileges of the Jewish people, both civil and religious. See Lightfoot Hor. Heb. and Kuinoel on John 9. 22. Buxtorf. Lex. Rab. b) where it does not directly refer to any thing expressed, but still the idea 'according to nature or custom' etc. lies at the basis; then, now, indeed, perhaps, etc. but often not to be expressed in English. So τίς ἄρα, who now? who then? i. e. simply who? Matt. 18. 1: 19. 25: 24. 45. Mark 4. 41. Luke 8. 25: 12. 42: 22. 23. τί ἄρα, what then? what? Matt. 19. 27. Luke 1. 66. Acts 12. 18.—Soph. c) contrary to Classic usage (see above ἆρα is used in N. T. as illative at the beginning of a clause, and without interrogation, therefore, consequently, etc. Luke 11. 48. II. As INTERROGATIVE, ἆρα, at the beginning of a clause, serves merely to denote a question, like the Lat. num, and cannot be expressed in English. It requires the answer to be negative. c) meton. for a silverling, a piece of silver, i. e. a silver coin, the Jewish shekel, σίκλος, siclus, Matt. 26. 15: 27. 5, 3, 6, 9. Acts 19. 19. Till the captivity the Jews had no coins; the skekel being properly a weight, and all the money being reckoned by weight and not by tale; Gen. 23. 15, 16. Ex. 21. 32. Josh. 7. 21. Comp. Calmet art. Money. In the time of the Maccabees silver coins were first struck, 1 Macc. 15. 6, with the inscription שקל ישראל, shekel of Israel, which were equal to four Attic drachmæ or one stater, Jos. Ant. 3. 8. 2; with which agrees the weight of the specimens still preserved. See Eckhel Doctr. Numm. Vet. III. p. 464. The Attic drachma was equivalent to 16½ cents nearly, Boeckh Ath. Staatsh. I. p. 16, 17. II. 349, which would make the shekel worth nearly 67 cents [$\frac{67}{100}$ of a dollar]; but Josephus probably refers to the value of the drachma as current among the Romans, where it was equivalent to the denarius and worth about 14 cents; which makes the value of the shekel to be about 56 cents, [$\frac{56}{100}$ of a doll.] The Sept. translate שֶׁקֶל by δίδραχμον, a double drachma; which may be reconciled with Josephus by supposing either that the drachma of Alexandria was equal to two Attic drachmæ, or that the Jewish shekel before the captivity was less than it was afterwards. Comp. Gesen. Lex. Heb. art. שֶׁקֶל. Jahn § 117—In Acts 19. 19 it is matter of question whether ἀργύρια means the Jewish siclus, which would make the sum about 28,000 dollars; or whether it stands for the drachma or denarius, which would reduce the sum to about 7,000 dollars. In either case we must take into account the very high price of ancient books in general; and especially of those prepared by the γοῆται or magicians.

c) In the phrase ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, kingdom of God, Matt. 6. 33. Mark 1. 4, 15. Luke 4. 43: 6. 20. John 3. 13, 5. al. sæp. also ἡ βασ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, Matt. 13. 41: 20. 21. Rev. 1. 9. or τοῦ X. καὶ Θεοῦ Eph. 5. 5. or τοῦ Δαυΐδ, as the ancestor and type of the Messiah, Mark 11. 10. further, ἡ βασ. τῶν οὐρανῶν, kingdom of heaven, but only in Matt. as 3. 2: 4. 17. al. for which we find in 2 Tim. 4. 18 βασ. ἐπουράνιος; and likewise absol. ἡ βασιλεία, Matt. 8. 12: 9. 35. al. same as later Heb. מַלְכוּת הַשָּׁמַיִם or מַלְכוּת אֱלֹהִים. All these expressions are in N. T. synonymous, and signify the divine spiritual kingdom, the glorious reign of the Messiah. The idea of this kingdom has its basis in the prophecies of the O. T., where the coming of the Messiah and his triumphs are foretold; e. g. Ps. 2. and 110. Is. 2. 1—4, comp. with Mich. 4. 1 sq. where in v. 7. the Targum has מַלְכוּת הַשָּׁמַיִם,) Is. 11. 1 sq. Jer. 23. 5 sq. 31. 31 sq. 32. 37 sq. 33. 14 sq. Ez. 34. 23 sq. 37. 24 sq. and espec. Dan. 2. 44: 7. 14, 27: 9. 25 sq. His reign is here figuratively described as a golden age, when the true religion, and with it the Jewish theocracy, should be re-established in more than pristine purity, and universal peace and happiness prevail. All this was doubtless to be understood in a spiritual sense; and so the devout Jews of our Saviour's time appear to have received it; as Zacharias, Luke 1. 67 sq. Simeon, 2. 25 sq. Anna, 2. 36 sq. Joseph, Luke 23. 50, 51. But the Jews at large gave to these prophecies a temporal meaning; and expected a Messiah who should come in the clouds of heaven, and as king of the Jewish nation restore the ancient religion and worship, reform the corrupt morals of the people, make expiation for their sins, free them from the yoke of foreign dominion, and at length reign over the whole earth in peace and glory; comp. Keil Hist. dogm. de regno Mess. in Opusc. Acad. p. 22 sq. Bertholdt Christol. Judæor. p. 187 sq.—Referring to the O. T. idea, we may therefore regard the 'kingdom of heaven,' etc. in the N. T. as designating in its Christian sense, the Christian dispensation, or 'the community of those who receive Jesus as the Messiah, and who, united by his Spirit under him as their Head, rejoice in the truth, and live a holy life in love and in communion with him.' This spiritual kingdom has both an internal and an external form. As internal, it already exists and rules in the hearts of all Christians, and is therefore present. As external, it is either embodied in the visible church of Christ, and, in so far, is present and progressive; or it is to be perfected at the coming of the Messiah to judgment, and his subsequent spiritual reign in bliss and glory; in which view it is future. But these different aspects are not always distinguished; the expression often embracing alike the internal and the external sense, and referring both to its commencement in this world, and its completion in the world to come. II. Βάτος, ου, ὁ, a bath, Heb. בַּת, a Jewish measure for wine and oil, equal to the ephah for dry measure, Luke 16. 6. According to Josephus, Ant. 8. 2. 9, it contained 72 ξέσται or sextarii; but the sextarius, which at Rome was equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ pint, and would thus make the bath equal to $13\frac{1}{2}$ gallons, varied much in different places. The more usual estimate for the capacity of the bath, is $7\frac{1}{2}$ or 9 gallons. According to Ideler and Breckh, it was about $11\frac{1}{2}$ gallons; see in Κόρος. Comp. 1 K. 7. 26, 38. Βαττολογέω, ῶ, f. ήσω, compounded from λέγω and βάττος, a word derived by some from the Heb. בָּטָא to prate, to use many words, Leviticus 5. 4. or from בַּד, plur. בַּדִּים, empty words, Job 11. 3. comp. v. 2. Is. 16. 6: 44. 25. By others it is regarded as of Greek origin, and even as a proper name. This Battus, according to some, was a king of Cyrene who stuttered, Herodot. 4. 155; or, as others say, was a silly loquacious poet, who made long hymns full of repetitions; see Suid. It is more probably imitated, by a sort of onomatopœia, from a person who stutters or stammers; and thus βαττολογέω originally signified to stammer, and then to babble, to chatter; so Passow sub voc. —Hence in N. T. to use empty words, to repeat the same thing over and over, intrans. Matt. 6. 7, where it is explained by πολυλογία. Comp. Ecclus. 7. 14. Simplic. in Epictet. p. 212. Βηθανία, ας, ἡ, Bethany, Syro-Chald. בֵּית חִינֵי (house of dates), from אַחֲוָנָא a date, Buxtorf. Lex. Rab. Talm. 38.

1. A town or village about fifteen furlongs E. from Jerusalem (John 11. 18) beyond the mount of Olives; so called from the great number of palm trees which grew there. It was the residence of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus; and Jesus often went out from Jerusalem to lodge there. At present it is a miserable village. Matt. 21. 17: 26. 6. Mark 11. 1, 11, 12: 14. 3. Luke 19. 29: 24. 50. John 11. 1, 18: 12. 1.

2. A place on the eastern side of Jordan, where John baptized. The exact position of it is not known. John 1. 28, in later edit. where others read Βηθαβαρά q. v.—Some derive it here from בֵּית אֳנִיָּה, i. e. house or place of ships; [rather shipping:] and suppose it to have been the same place as Bethabara.

Βηθεσδά, ἡ, indec. Bethesda, Syro-Chald. בֵּית חִסְדָּא (house of compassion) Buxt. Lex. Ch. Rab. 798, a pool or fountain at Jerusalem, whose waters had a healing virtue, with a building over or near it for the accommodation of the sick. John 5. 2. See Calmet. Jahn Arch. § 198.

Βηθλεέμ, ἡ, indec. Bethlehem, Heb. בֵּית לֶחֶם (house of bread), Gen. 35. 19: pr. name of a celebrated city, the birth-place of David and Jesus. It was situated at the limits of the tribe of Judah, about six or eight miles south by west of Jerusalem, and probably received its appellation from the fertility of the circumjacent country. Matt. 2. 1, 5, 6, 8, 16. Luke 2. 4, 15. John 7. 42.

Βηθσαϊδά, ἡ, indec. also Βηθσαϊδάν, text. rec. in Matt. and Mark, Bethsaida, Heb. בֵּית צַיִד (place of hunting or fishing), pr. name of two cities or towns in N. T.

1. Bethsaida of Galilee (John 12. 21), so called perhaps in distinction from the other Bethsaida, probably lay near Capernaum, being mentioned in connection with it, Matt. 11. 21, 24. Luke 10. 13, 15. Comp. also Mark 6. 45 with John 6. 17. Eusebius says only that it lay on the sea of Gennesareth, i. e. the western shore; as its name also would imply. It was the birthplace of Philip, Andrew, and Peter, John 1. 45.—Matt. 11. 21. Mark 6. 45. (8. 22.) Luke 10. 13. John 1. 45 : 12. 21.

2. The other Bethsaida lay in Gaulonitis at the N. E. extremity of the lake, near where the Jordan enters it. This town was enlarged by Philip, tetrarch of that region (Luke 3. 1.), and called Julias, in honour of Julia the daughter of Augustus. Jos. Ant. 18. 2. 1. B. J. 2. 9. 1. ib. 3. 10. 7. Plin. H. N. 15. 15. In the desert tract near this city Jesus miraculously fed the five thousand, and afterwards departed by ship to the other side of the lake, Luke 9. 10. Comp. Matt. 14. 13 sq. Mark 6. 31 sq. John 6. 1, 2, 5 sq. 17, 22, 24.

Luke 22. 42, see Winer § 13. 2. Buttm. § 103. III. 3; imperf. ἐβουλόμην; aor. 1 ἐβουλήθην James 4. 4. and ἠβουλήθην 2 John 12, see Buttm. § 83. n. 5.—to will, to be willing, to wish, to desire. According to Buttmann, the distinction between βούλομαι and θέλω is, that the latter expresses an active volition and purpose, the former a mere passive desire, propensity, willingness; Lexilog. I. p. 26. Or, βούλομαι expresses also the inward predisposition and bent from which the active volition proceeds; see Tittm. de Synon. N. T. p. 124. Hence βούλομαι is never used of brutes. In speaking of the gods, Homer uses βούλωμαι in the sense of θέλω; Buttm. l. c. p. 27.—In N. T. followed by an infin. expressed or implied, either of the aor. or pres. comp. Γαδαρηνός, οῦ, ὁ, a Gadarene, i.e. an inhabitant of the city of Gadara, Γαδαρά, the fortified capital of Peræa, or the region east of the Jordan, Jos. B. J. 4. 7. 3. ib. 2. 20. 4. According to Eusebius (Onomast.) it was situated over against Tiberias and Scythopolis, in or near the range of mountains bordering the eastern shore of the lake and the valley of the Jordan, on the site, as is supposed, of the present village Om Keis, which lies S. E. from the southern extremity of the lake, and not far from the river Hieromax. Josephus calls Gadara a Greek city, πόλις Ἑλληνίς, Ant. 17. 11. 4; and says it had many wealthy inhabitants, B. J. 4. 7. 3. When first taken from the Jews, it was annexed by the Romans to Syria, Jos. B. II. Γάζα, ης, ἡ, Gaza, Heb. עַזָּה ('the strong'), a celebrated city of the Philistines, situated on a hill near the coast of the Mediterranean towards the southern limits of the territory of the Israelites, and constituting the key between Egypt and Syria. It was assigned by Joshua to the tribe of Judah, who subdued it; but the possession of it was retained, or soon recovered, by the Philistines; Josh. 15. 47. Judg. 1. 18: 16. 1 sq. After having destroyed Tyre, Alexander the Great laid siege to Gaza also, which was then held by a Persian garrison, and took it after two months. He appears to have left the city standing; but about B. C. 95, Alexander Jannæus took it, after a siege of a year, and destroyed it. Gabinus afterwards rebuilt it, and Augustus bestowed it on Herod the Great; after whose death it was annexed to Syria. See Jos. Ant. 11. 8. 3, 4. ib. 13. 5. 5.

'which leads through the desert, where Philip met the eunuch.' Others refer ἔρημος to Gaza itself; and suppose the later city [of that name] to have been built on a different site. As however Gaza was sacked and destroyed in A. D. 65, during an insurrection of the Jews, (see Jos. B. J. 2. 18. 1,) we may perhaps regard αὕτη ἐστὶν ἔρημος as the words, not of the angel, but of Luke, implying that the city was desolate at the time he wrote. Comp. Krebs Obs. in N. Γαλάτης, ου, ὁ, a Galatian, Gal. 3. 1.

Γαλατία, ας, ἡ, Galatia or Gallogræcia, a province of Asia Minor, lying S. and S. E. of Bithynia and Paphlagonia; W. of Pontus; N. and N. W. of Cappadocia; and N. and N. E. of Lycaonia and Phrygia. Its name was derived from the Gauls, Γαλάται; of whom two tribes, the Trocmi and Tolistoboii, with a tribe of the Celts, Tectosages, migrated thither after the sacking of Rome by Brennus; and mingling with the former inhabitants, the whole were called Gallogræci. The Celtic language continued to be spoken by their descendants at least until the time of Jerome, 600 years after the migration. Under Augustus, about A. C. 26, this country became a Roman province. Galatia was distinguished for the fertility of its soil and for its trade. It was the seat of colonies from various nations, among whom were many Jews; and from all these Paul appears to have made many converts to Christianity. See Strabo I. p. 301. ed. Tauchn. Pausan. Γάρ, a causative particle, standing always after one or more words in a clause, and expressing the reason of what has been before affirmed or implied; for, in the sense of because, etc. Comp. Buttm. § 149. p. 428. Sturz Lex. Xenophont. I. p. 565.

I. SIMPLY, i. e. ALONE. a) after an antecedent sentence expressed. Matt. 1. 20 μὴ φοβηθῇς παραλαβεῖν Μαριάμ· τὸ γὰρ ἐν αὐτῇ γεννηθέν. v. 21 καλέσεις τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦν· αὐτὸς γὰρ σώσει. Mark 1. 22: 6. 18. Luke 1. 15. al. passim. After a clause of prohibition or caution, Matt. 3. 9. 24. 5. Luke 7. 6. al. We find γάρ put after two words, in a clause, Matt. 2. 6. Mark 1. 38. Luke 6. 23. John 12. 8. Acts 4. 20. al. —So γάρ is often found in two consecutive clauses; viz. where the same idea is expressed twice,—i. e. affirmatively and negatively, or generally and specially, John 8. 42. 1 Cor. 16. 7. 2 Cor. 11. 19. or where the latter clause is dependent on the former, Matt. 10. 20. Mark 6. 52. John 5. 21, 22. Acts 2. 15. or where two different causes are assigned, Matt. 6. 32: 18. 10, 11. Rom. 16. 18, 19. In similar circumstances, γάρ is also found in three consecutive clauses, Mark 9. 39, 40, 41. Matt. 16. 25, 27. Luke 9. 24, 25, 26. Acts 26. 26. al. So Matt. 26. 10, 11, where ἔργον γάρ and βαλοῦσα γάρ refer to the act of the woman; and πάντοτε γάρ to the objection of the disciples.—The γάρ is also sometimes repeated, where the writer again takes up a sentence which began with γάρ and was interrupted, as Rom. 15. 26, 27. 2 Cor. 5. 2, 4.

b) elliptically, where the clause to which it refers is omitted, and is to be supplied in thought; comp. Buttm. l. c. In this case it merely assigns the motive for an opinion or judgment, etc. Matt. 2. 2 where is he who is born king of the Jews? [he must be born,] εἴδομεν γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀστέρα, FOR we have seen his star. Matt. 27. 23 τί γὰρ κακὸν ἐποίησε, NO! FOR what evil hath he done? comp. below in c. Mark 8. 38 what can a man give in exchange for his soul? [vain hope!] ὃς γὰρ ἄν, FOR whoever, etc. Mark 12. 23. Luke 22. 37. John 4. 44 he departed into Galilee, [not indeed into Nazareth his πατρίς,] αὐτὸς γὰρ Ἰησοῦς, FOR Jesus himself had testified, etc. comp. Luke 4. 16 sq.—Acts 13. 36: 21. 13: 22. 26. Rom. 2. 25: 8. 18 [yea, I say suffer with him that we may also be glorified with him,] λογίζομαι γάρ, FOR I reckon, etc. Comp. Stuart's Comm. in loc. Rom. 14. 10. 1 Cor. 1. 18. al. sæp.—Xen. Mem. 4. 2. 6.—In a quotation, where the preceding clause is omitted, Acts 17. 28.—So καὶ γάρ, Matt. 8. 9 and Luke 7. 8, [this I know by comparing my own case,] καὶ γὰρ ἐγώ, FOR I too am, etc. Matt. 15. 27 ναὶ, Κύριε, καὶ γὰρ τὰ κυνάρια, true, Lord, [yet still help me,] FOR even the dogs, etc. So οὐ γάρ Matt. 9. 13. Acts 4. 20. al.

c) elliptically and in common usage γάρ is also simply intensive, and merely serves to strengthen a clause, like the Engl. then, truly, etc. (α) in questions, where a preceding NO! may perhaps be supplied; comp. in b. (Matt. 27. 23.) John 7. 41 μὴ γὰρ ἐκ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ὁ Χριστὸς ἔρχεται, shall THEN Christ come out of Galilee? Acts 8. 31 πῶς γὰρ ἂν δυναίμην, how can I THEN? 19. 35 τίς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἄνθρωπος, what man THEN is there? Rom. 3. 3 and Phil. 1. 18, τί γάρ; what THEN! 1 Cor. 11. 22. Γέ, an enclitic particle, which serves to strengthen or render more emphatic the word to which it is appended, by placing it in opposition to other words, and thus fixing the attention upon it; e. g. a part in reference to a whole, a single object in reference to many, a less in reference to a greater, and vice versâ. Hence it often cannot be rendered in English, but must be expressed by a stronger emphasis in pronunciation, etc. Its general meaning is, at least, indeed, even, etc. Comp. Buttm. § 149. p. 431. It was so called from an ancient city, Josh. 19. 35, which also gave name to the adjacent lake, יַם־כִּנֶּרֶת Num. 34. 11.—This lake is also called the Sea of Galilee, Matt. 4. 18; the Sea of Tiberias, John 21. 1. It is about twelve miles long and five broad, and is still celebrated for the purity and salubrity of its waters, and the abundance of its fish. Embosomed in lofty mountains, the scenery around it is the most romantic and picturesque in Palestine. It is subject to sudden, though not long continued tempests. See Jos. B. J. 3. 10. 7. Rosenm. Γερασηνός, οῦ, ὁ, a Gerasene, i. e. a native or inhabitant of the city or district of Gerasa. This city was situated in the eastern part of Perœa, or Gilead, near the confines of the Arabian desert, on the parallel of Samaria, and was one of the cities of the Decapolis. It was large, opulent, and splendid; as is apparent from the magnificent ruins still remaining, which have been described by Burckhardt and others. It is mentioned by Josephus, B. J. 1. 4. 8. ib. 3. 3. 3. ib. 4. 9. 1. The place is now called Jerrash. See Rosenm. Bibl. Geogr. II. ii. p. 28. Reland. Palæst. p. 806. Legh, in Bibl. Repos. III. p. 651.—Many Mss., and also Knapp, read Γερασηνῶν, Matt. 8. 28, where the text. rec. has Γεργεσηνῶν, and other Mss. Γαδαρηνῶν, which is read also at Mark 5. 1. Luke 8. 26, 37. The city of Gerasa lay too remote from the lake to admit the possibility of the miracle's having been wrought in its vicinity; if therefore the reading Γερασηνῶν be correct, it must be because the city gave its name to a large extent of territory, including Gadara and its environs; and then Matthew only uses a broader appellation, where the other evangelists employ a more specific one. This is not improbable; since Jerome says (ad Obad. 1.) that ancient Gilead was in his day called Gerasa; and Saadias in his Arabic version puts Jerrash for the Heb. Gilead. Origen also testifies that Γερασηνῶν was the ancient reading. See in Γεργεσηνός.

Γεργεσηνός, οῦ, ὁ, a Gergesene, Heb. גִּרְגָּשִׁי and Sept. Γεργεσαῖος Gen. 15. 21. Deut. 7. 1. Josh. 24. 11; pr. name of one of the ancient tribes of Canaan destroyed by Joshua, and of which Josephus says that nothing remained but the name, Ant. 1. 6. 2. Origen however says, that a city Γέργεσα anciently stood on the eastern shore of the lake of Tiberias, and that the precipice was still pointed out, down which the swine rushed; Opp. IV. p. 140. But, in the silence of all other testimony, this tradition can have little weight; and the reading Γεργεσηνῶν in Matt. 8. 28, which rests on Origen's conjecture, is therefore less probable than Γερασηνῶν, which he testifies to have been the ancient one. Comp. in Γερασηνός.

Here, according to the two passages in Mark and Acts, the sense would seem to be, to speak in other living languages; but, if the passages in 1 Cor. be taken as the basis, these phrases would seem to mean, to speak another kind of language, i. e. referring perhaps to a person in a state of high spiritual excitement or ecstasy from inspiration, unconscious of external things and wholly absorbed in adoring communion with God, breaking forth into abrupt expressions of prayer and praise, which are not coherent and therefore not always intelligible to the multitude; comp. 1 Cor. 14. 2, 4, 6, 7 sq. Most interpreters have adopted the first meaning; some prefer the latter [but quite wrongly. See my notes on the passages. Ed.] Others suppose there is a reference to two distinct gifts. The scribes had the charge of transcribing the sacred books, of interpreting difficult passages, and of deciding in cases which grew out of the ceremonial law. Their influence was of course great; and since many of them were members of the Sanhedrim, we often find them mentioned with οἱ πρεσβύτεροι and οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς. Γώγ, indec. Gog, Heb. גּוֹג. This name is applied in the O. T. (Ez. c. 38, 39,) to the king of a people called Magog, inhabiting regions far remote from Palestine. By Magog, the ancients would seem to have intended the northern nations generally, which they also called Σκυθαί. In N. T. the name Gog is also apparently spoken of a similar remote people, who are to war against the Messiah. Rev. 20. 8.

Δαβίδ, ὁ, indec. written also Δανίδ or Δανίδ as in Sept. and Josephus, David, Heb. דָּוִד (beloved), later דָּוִיד, (Gesen. Ps. 95. 7.—Ὁ υἱὸς Δαβίδ, the son of David, i. e. descended from him; spoken of Joseph the husband of Mary, Matt. 1. 20; often applied to Jesus as a title of the expected Messiah, Matt. 9. 27: 12. 23: 15. 22: 20. 30, 31. Δαιμονίζομαι, f. ἰσομαι, (δαίμων,)= δαιμόνιον ἔχω, to have a demon, i. e. to be afflicted, vexed, possessed, with an evil spirit, to be a demoniac; Matt. 4. 24: 8. 16, 28, 33: 9. 32: 12. 22: 15. 22. Mark 1. 32: 5. 15, 16, 18. Luke 8. 36. John 10. 21, coll. v. 20.—It is much disputed, whether the writers of the N. T. used this word to denote the actual presence of evil spirits in the persons affected, or whether they employed it only in compliance with popular usage and belief; just as we now use the word lunatic without assenting to the old opinion of the influence of the moon. A serious difficulty in the way of this latter supposition is, that the demoniacs every where at once address Jesus as the Messiah; e. g. Matt. 8. 29. Mark 1. 24: 5. 7. Luke 4. 34: 8. 28. See Jos. Δευτερόπρωτος, ου, ὁ, ἡ, adj. pr. & lit. the second-first, found only in Luke 6. 1, σάββατον τὸ δευτερόπρωτον, meaning, the second-first sabbath, as a sort of proper name for the first sabbath after the festival of unleavened bread connected with the passover. The paschal lamb was to be killed and eaten on the eve of (preceding) the 14th day of Nisan, Lev. 23. 5; on the 15th was the first day of the festival of unleavened bread, a day of rest or sabbath, Lev. 23. 6, 7, and, when coinciding with the weekly sabbath, called μεγάλη ἡμέρα τοῦ σαββάτου, a great sabbath or high festival, John 19. 31; on the morrow of this sabbath, or the 16th of Nisan, the sheaf of the first-fruits was to be presented, Lev. 23. 10, 11; and from this day, the 16th, were to be counted seven full weeks to the day of Pentecost, Lev. 23. 15, 16. The sabbath of the first of these weeks was probably called the σάββατον δευτερόπρωτον, as being the first, indeed, of the seven, but the second in respect of the first day or sabbath of unleavened bread. So Scaliger and most interpreters. — Others translate, the first of two sabbaths, and refer it to a time when two sabbatical days would immediately succeed each other; e. g. when the first or last day of unleavened bread (Lev. 23. 7, 8) fell on the day before the weekly sabbath, the former would then be a σάββατον δευτερόπρωτον. Ἐάν, conjunct. (for εἰ ἄν,) if, contracted also into ἄν, see Αν II. It differs from εἰ, in that εἰ expresses a condition which is merely hypothetical, i. e. a subjective possibility; while ἐάν implies a condition which experience must determine,—i.e. an objective possibility,—and refers therefore always to something future; see Herm. ad Vig. p. 834. Winer § 42. p. 242. (Comp. εἰ and ἐάν in 1 Cor. 7. 36. Rev. 2. 5.) Ἐάν is usually construed with the Subjunctive; in later writers also with the Indicative; and very rarely in Classic writers with the Optative; see Buttm. § 139. 8. n. 3. Herm. l. c. p. 822. I. As a CONDITIONAL particle; used ALONE, i. e. without other particles.

1. With the Optative, implying that the thing in question is possible, but uncertain and problematical, though assumed as probable: Buttm. § 139. 9. 3. Winer § 42. p. 242. Herm. ad Vig. p. 818, 830. In N. T. followed only by the indic. in the apodosis, affirming something definite; e. g. foll. by pres. 1 Pet. 3. 14 εἰ καὶ πάσχοιτε διὰ δικαιοσύνην, μακάριοι sc. ἔστε, but even if ye suffer, (as is most probable) etc. comp. εἰ καί in III. below. So foll. by præt. Acts 24. 19 οὓς ἔδει ἐπὶ σοῦ παρεῖναι καὶ κατηγορεῖν, εἴ τι ἔχοιεν πρός με.—Hom. Il. 9. 389. εἰ καί Lucian Tox. 1. Xen. Hiero 9. 10. comp. Matth. § 524. 3. So εἰ τύχοι, should it so happen, (as is probable), i. e. it may be, perhaps, 1 Cor. 14. 10: 15. 37. Here the apodosis in each case lies in the affirmation.—In Greek writers, the use of εἰ with the Opt. is much more extensive.

2. With the Indicative, implying possibility without the expression of uncertainty, a condition or contingency as to which there is no doubt; Buttm. § 139. 9. 1. Passow in Εἰ A. 2. Winer § 42. p. 240. sq.

b) with the Indic. future, and in the apodosis, (α) foll. by pres., 1 Pet. 2. 20, or perf. as pres. James 2. 11 εἰ οὐ μοιχεύσεις, φονεύσεις δὲ, γέγονας παραβάτης νόμου. So Luke 9. 13 εἰ μήτι πορ. ἡμεῖς ἀγοράσωμεν, where others read ἀγοράσομεν. 1 Cor. 14. 5 ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ διερμηνεύῃ, others διερμηνεύει. Phil. 3. 12 διώκω δέ, εἰ καὶ καταλάβω, comp. in εἰ καί below. Rev. 11. 5 bis, εἴ τις θέλῃ, others θέλει. —More frequent in the later prose writers.

II. As an INTERROGATIVE particle, whether, Lat. an, viz.

a) pr. in an indirect question, after verbs implying question, doubt, uncertainty, and the like, with the Opt. and Indic. as in the Classical writers, Buttm. § 149. p. 423. Passow in Εἰ B. Matth. § 526. § 617. 5.—With the Optative, see above in I. 1. Acts 17. 11 ἀνακρίνοντες τὰς γραφὰς, εἰ ἔχοι ταῦτα οὕτως. 25. 20. So also εἰ ἄραγε, if perhaps, whether perhaps, Acts 17. 27.—Plut. Cæs. 14. Xen. An. 1. 8. 15.—With the Indicative, see above in I. 2. So with Indic. present, after εἰπεῖν Matt. 26. 63. after ἐπερωτᾷν Mark 10. 2. ἴδωμεν Matt. 27. 49. Mark 15. 36. ψηφίζειν Luke 14. 28. βουλεύεσθαι Luke 14. 31. οὐκ οἶδα John 9. 25. κρίνειν Acts 4. 19. πυνθάνεσθαι Acts 10. 18. ἀκούεσθαι Acts 19. 2. πειράζειν 2 Cor. 13. 5. γνῶναι δοκιμήν 2 Cor. 2. 9. etc.—Lucian. D. Mort. 20. 3. Xen. Hi. 1. 7.—With Indic. future, Mark 3. 2 παρετήρουν αὐτὸν εἰ θεραπεύσει. 1 Cor. 7. 16 τί οἶδας, εἰ κ. τ. λ. —Xen. An. 1. 3. 5.—With indic. aorist, Mark 15. 44 ἐπηρώτησεν αὐτὸν, εἰ πάλαι ἀπέθανε. Acts 5. 8. 1 Cor. 1. 16.—So also εἰ ἄρα, if perhaps, whether perhaps, with indic. future, Mark 11. 13 ἦλθεν εἰ ἄρα εὑρήσει τι. Acts 8. 22.—with ind. pres. Xen. Mem. 2. 2. 2.

b) in a direct question, Lat. num, ne, where it implies some doubt or uncertainty, in the mind of the interrogator, which cannot be expressed in English. Luke 13. 23 εἶπέ τις αὐτῷ· Κύριε, εἰ ὀλίγοι οἱ σωζόμενοι; Luke 22. 49 εἶπεν αὐτῷ· Κύριε, εἰ πατάξομεν ἐν μαχαίρᾳ; Acts 1. 6. So Matt. 12. 10: 19. 3. Luke 14. 3. Acts 7. 1: 21. 37: 22. 25. So Sept. and 1 K. 1. 27. Gen. 17. 17. Job 6. 5, 6. for Gen. 17. 17. 1 K. 13. 14. Ruth 1. 19. Job 6. 6. Dan. 2. 26: 3. 14.—Tob. 5. 5.—It is doubtful whether εἰ is thus used by any Classical Greek writer; but it would seem to have become current in this sense in the later [Qu? laxer] language of common life; comp. Winer § 61. 2.

III. In CONNEXION WITH OTHER PARTICLES; where however for the most part each retains its own power. Only the following require to be here noted, in which εἰ precedes other particles; its usual place being at the beginning of a clause. For καὶ εἰ see in εἰ καί below.

(α) εἰ ἄρα, see in Ἄρα I. c; and above in II. a.

(β) εἴγε, see in Γέ II. γ.

(γ) εἰ δέ, where δέ has its usual adversative or continuative power, but if, and if, etc. Matt. 12. 7. Luke 11. 19. John 10. 38. al. sæp. So in εἰ δὲ καί, and if also, etc. Luke 11. 18. 1 Cor. 4. 7. 2 Cor. 4. 3: 5. 16: 11. 6. non al. comp. in Δέ II. d.—Εἰ δὲ μή, but if not, etc. always standing elliptically, (Winer § 66. 6. note,) properly only after an affirmative clause, of which it then expresses the contrary, or negative; e. g. John 14. 2 ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ τοῦ πατρός μου μοναὶ πολλαί εἰσιν· εἰ δὲ μή, εἶπον ἂν ὑμῖν. v. 11 πιστεύσατέ μοι· εἰ δὲ μή κ. τ. λ. Rev. 2. 5, 16. non al. So Gen. 24. 49: 30. 1. al.—Xen. H. G. 1. 4. 4. Œc. 15. 2.—Sometimes also after a negative clause, of which it then necessarily expresses the contrary, and therefore affirms, if otherwise, else; Mark 2. 21 οὐδεὶς ἐπίβλημα ἐπιῤῥάπτει ἐπὶ ἱματίῳ παλαιῷ· εἰ δὲ μή, αἴρει κ. τ. λ. v. 22. non al. Comp. Buttm. § 148. n. 10. Matth. § 617. b. Passow in Εἰ μή.—Herodot. 6. 56. Thuc. 2. 5. Xen. An. 7. 1. 8.—Εἰ δὲ μή γε, see in Γέ II.

(δ) εἰ καί, where καί either refers to the subsequent clause, (and then each retains its own separate power, if also;) or it refers to the condition expressed by εἰ, if even, i. e. though, although. Herm. ad Vig. p. 832.—(1) genr. if also, with the Indic. 1 Cor. 7. 21. 2 Cor. 11.

Phil. 3. 12, see above in I. 3.—(2) if even, i. e. though, although, implying the reality and actual existence of that which is assumed; thus differing from the above use of εἰ καί, and also from καὶ εἰ, which [rather since both] leave it uncertain; Herm. ad Vig. p. 832. Buttm. § 149. p. 423. Only with the Indic. e. g. present, Luke 18. 4 εἰ καὶ τὸν Θεὸν οὐ φοβοῦμαι. 2 Cor. 4. 16: 12. 11, 15. Phil. 2. 17. Col. 2. 5. Heb. 6. 9. imperf. 2 Cor. 7. 8. future, [Matt. 26. 33.] Luke 11. 8. aorist, 2 Cor. 7. 8 bis, 12. non al.—Lucian. D. Mort. 9. 1. Xen. An. 6. 6. 27.—So very rarely καὶ εἰ, even if, though, = εἰ καί, Mark 14. 29. 1 Pet. 3. 1. καὶ γὰρ εἰ 2 Cor. 13. 4. καὶ γὰρ εἴπερ 1 Cor. 8. 5. non al.

(ε) εἰ μή, if not, i. e. unless, except, expressing a negative condition, supposition, etc. in which μή refers to the whole clause; thus differing from εἰ οὐ, where οὐ refers only to some particular word with which it expresses one idea; Winer § 59. 5. Buttm. § 148. 2. b, and marg. Herm. ad Vig. p. 833, 890.—(1) before finite verbs, e. g. with the Indic. Matt. 24. 22 εἰ μὴ ἐκολοβώθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι. Mark 13. 20. The plur. forms, οἴδαμεν John 9. 20 sq. οἴδατε 1 Cor. 9. 13, οἴδασι Luke 11. 44, belong to the later Greek, instead of the purer ones ἴσμεν, ἴστε Heb. 12. 17, ἴασι Acts 26. 4; see Winer § 15 εἴδω. Matt. § 231. Οἶδα is strictly, to have seen, perceived, apprehended; hence it takes the present signif. to know, and the pluperf. becomes an imperfect; Buttm. l. c. and § 113. no. 10.

II. As LOGICAL COPULA, connecting the subject and the predicate, TO BE; where the predicate specifies who or what a person or thing is, in respect to nature, origin, office, condition, circumstances, state, place, habits, disposition of mind, etc. etc. But this all lies in the predicate, and not in the copula, which merely connects the predicate with the subject. The predicate may be made by various parts of speech, etc. Thus

a) with an adjective as predicate; which is strictly the more logical construction. Matt. 2. 6 σὺ, Βηθλεὲμ, οὐδαμῶς ἐλαχίστη εἶ ἐν τοῖς ἡγ. κ. τ. λ. 18. 8. Mark 1. 7. Gal. 3. 28.—In this construction, εἰμί with an adject. sometimes forms a periphrasis for the cognate verb; e. g. δυνατός εἰμι = δύναμαι, Luke 14. 31. Acts 11. 17. Rom. 4. 21. ἔκδηλός εἰμι = ἐκδηλοῦμαι, 2 Tim. 3. 9.—Herodian 8. 1. 2 κρύφιός εἰμι = κρύπτομαι.—For the particip. as predic. see below in f.

f) with a participle of another verb as predicate, viz. (α) without the article, and then εἰμί often forms with the participle a periphrasis for a finite tense of the same verb, expressing however a continuance or duration of the action or state, like the corresponding construction in English; Luke 5. 1 καὶ αὐτὸς ἦν ἑστώς, and he was standing, instead of imperf. ἵστη, he stood. Matt. 24. 9 καὶ ἔσεσθε μισούμενοι ὑπὸ πάντων. Mark 10. 32 ἦσαν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ ἀναβαίνοντες εἰς Ἱεροσ. where ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ is the predicate, and ἀναβαίνοντες is an adjunct. Luke 7. 8. al. Comp. Winer l. c.—(β) With the article, where the participle may then be regarded as equivalent to a noun, or as an emphatic shorter construction instead of a personal tense of the verb; Matt. 3. 3 οὗτος γάρ ἐστι ὁ ῥηθεὶς ὑπὸ Ἡσαΐου, i. e. the person spoken of, the predicted, instead of ὃς ἐῤῥήθη. 13. 19. 4. Sometimes εἰς with accus. is found where the natural construction would seem to require ἐν with dat.; as after verbs which imply neither motion nor direction, but simply rest in a place or state. In such cases the idea of a previous coming into that place or state is either actually expressed, or is implied in the context. See Passow, Εἰς no. 6. Winer § 54. 4. b. Matth. § 596. Comp. Buttm. § 151. I. 8. So Matt. 2. 23 ἐλθὼν κατῴκησεν εἰς πόλιν. Mark 1. 39 καὶ ἦν κηρύσσων εἰς τὰς συναγωγάς, comp. v. 38 where is ἄγωμεν εἰς τὰς ἐχομένας κωμοπόλεις. Sic. 5. 84.—Here belongs also in N. T. the apparent construction of εἰς with a genitive through the omission of its noun; as εἰς ᾅδου, Acts 2. 27, 31, i. e. for εἰς οἶκον ᾅδου, Buttm. § 132. n. 9. Matth. § 578. g. Passow l. c. no. 7. The phrase in Acts is, ἐγκαταλείπειν εἰς ᾅδου, quoted from Ps. 16. 10 where Sept. for לְשְׁאוֹל, i. e. to leave or abandon TO the grave or Sheôl; not strictly to leave IN it. Comp. Gen. 44. 31.—In other instances εἰς and ἐν are used alternately, according to the different shape of the thought; e. g. 1. The father of John the Baptist, a priest of the class of Abia; see Ἀβιά. Luke 1. 5, 12, 13, 18, 21, 40, 59, 67.

2. A person killed in the temple, Matt. 23. 35; and Luke 11. 51 Ζαχαρίου υἱοῦ Βαραχίου. The allusion is probably to Zechariah, the son of Jehoida (prob. also called Barachias,) who was stoned by order of Joash, 2 Chr. 24. 20 sq. Others refer it to the prophet Zechariah son of Barachiah, Zech. 1. 1; but history gives no account of his death. Others again make the reference to Zacharias the son of Baruch, who was slain by the Zelotæ in the temple just before the destruction of Jerusalem, Jos. B. J. 4. 5. 4; but the aor. ἐφονεύσατε is against this supposition. See Olshausen on Matt. l. c.

1. The father of John the Baptist, a priest of the class of Abia; see Ἀβιά. Luke 1. 5, 12, 13, 18, 21, 40, 59, 67.

2. A person killed in the temple, Matt. 23. 35; and Luke 11. 51 Ζαχαρίου υἱοῦ Βαραχίου. The allusion is probably to Zechariah, the son of Jehoida (prob. also called Barachias,) who was stoned by order of Joash, 2 Chr. 24. 20 sq. Others refer it to the prophet Zechariah son of Barachiah, Zech. 1. 1; but history gives no account of his death. Others again make the reference to Zacharias the son of Baruch, who was slain by the Zelotæ in the temple just before the destruction of Jerusalem, Jos. B. J. 4. 5. 4; but the aor. ἐφονεύσατε is against this supposition. See Olshausen on Matt. l. c.

Ἤ, a particle disjunctive, interrogative, comparative; see Passow in voc. Buttm. § 149. p. 424. Matth. § 619. Winer § 57. 3. p. 370.

b) ἤ—ἤ, repeated, either—or, aut—aut; Matt. 6. 24 ἢ γὰρ τὸν ἕνα μισήσει —ἢ ἑνὸς ἀνθέξεται. Luke 16. 13. 1 Cor. 14. 6. 2 Cor. 1. 13.—Luc. D. Deor. 18. 1 or 3. Xen. Mem. 1. 2. 16.

2. INTERROGATIVE, where, however the primary force or is strictly retained, or whether? or if perhaps? an forte? comp. Buttm. l. c. Winer § 61. 1. b.

a) prop. indirect, in the latter clause of a double interrogation after πότερον, whether—or, e. g. John 7. 17 γνώσεται πότερον ἐκ τ. Θεοῦ ἐστιν, ἢ ἐγὼ κ. τ. λ. Winer l. c. Matth. § 619. 2.—Luc. D. Deor. 20. 3. Xen. Cyr. 1. 3. 2, 15.—So genr. where πότερον or something equivalent is implied, Matt. 9. 5: 22. 17. Luke 7. 19; 20. Acts 8. 34. Rom. 2. 4. —Xen. Conv. 4. 52.

b) genr. and in a direct question, where the interrogation implies a negation of something preceding. Matt. 7. 9 ἢ τίς ἐστιν ἐξ ὑμῶν ἄνθρωπος; 20. 15. Rom. 3. 29. 1 Cor. 1. 13: 9. 6, 8, 10. 2 Cor. 1. 17. al.

3. COMPARATIVE, than, e. g. a) after comparatives and words implying comparison. Matt. 10. 15 ἀνεκτότερον—ἢ τῇ πόλει ἐκείνῃ. Mark 10. 25. Luke 16. 17. John 4. 1. Rom. 13. 11. μᾶλλον ἤ, more than, rather than, Matt. 18. 13. John 3. 19. Acts 4. 19. πρὶν ἤ, sooner than, before. Matt. 1. 18. Mark 14. 30. Luke 2. 26. Acts 2. 20. comp. Buttm. § 149. 1. p. 430. c) after the positive, where it may be rendered rather than, more than, = μᾶλλον ἤ, so that the positive with ἤ is equivalent to the comparative. The grammarians supply μᾶλλον, but the construction is found also in the Classic writers, perhaps from negligence, and in N. T. would seem to come rather through the Sept. from the Heb. mode of comparison with מִן; see Winer § 36. 1. Matth. § 457. n. 1. Herm. ad Vig. p. 884. Matt. 18. 8 καλόν σοι ἐστιν εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν ζωὴν χωλὸν ἢ κυλλὸν, ἢ δύο χεῖρας ἔχοντα βληθῆναι εἰς τὸ πῦρ τὸ αἰώνιον. v. 9. Mark 9. 43, 45, 47. Luke 17. 2: 18. 14. Ἡγεμών, όνος, ὁ, (ἡγέομαι,) a leader, guide, Hom. Od. 10. 505. Xen. An. 4. 2. 1. Zonar. Suid. Phavor. ἡγεμών· ὁ τῆς ὁδοῦ ἡγούμενος. leader, commander of an army, = στρατηγός, Xen. Mem. 3. 2. 4. Sept. for שַׂר Jer. 42. 1, 8.—In N. T.

1. a leader, chief, head. Matt. 2. 6 ἐν τοῖς ἡγεμόσιν Ἰούδα, quoted from Mic. 5. 1 where Heb. בְּאַלְפֵי יְהוּדָה, Sept. ἐν χιλιάσιν Ἰούδα. But אֲלָפִים in Mic. denotes prop. the families into which each tribe was divided, the heads of which were called אַלְפִים Zech. 12. 5, 6; and Matthew by meton. puts ἡγεμόνες heads of families, for the families themselves, and so for the cities in which they dwelt. So Sept. ἡγεμών for אַלּוּף Gen. 36. 15, 16 sq.—Jos. Ant. 11. 4. 4 οἱ τῶν πατριῶν ἡγεμόνες τῶν Ἰσραηλιτῶν. Of Lacedæmon as the leading state in Greece, Xen. An. 6. 1. 27. Conv. 8. 39. genr. Ag. 1. 3 ὥστε οὐ δευτέρων πρωτεύουσιν, ἀλλ' ἡγεμόνων ἡγεμονεύουσιν.

2. a governor, president, prefect, of a Roman province, whether proconsul, legate, or procurator. Augustus made a new partition of the provinces of the Roman empire into provinciæ senatoriæ and provinciæ imperatoriæ vel Cæsarum, ἐπαρχίαι τοῦ δήμου or Καίσαρος, the former being left under the nominal care of the senate, while the latter were under the direct control of the emperor. Of the latter kind was Syria, including Phœnicia and Judæa. To the former the senate sent officers for one year, called proconsuls, ἀνθύπατοι, though sometimes only of prætorian rank; they had only a civil power, and no military command nor authority over the taxes, both these latter being under the care of persons appointed by the emperor. Those sent to command in the provinciæ Cæsarum were called legati Cæsaris pro consule, proprætores, legati consulares, etc. They were usually, but not always, chosen from among the senators, during the pleasure of the emperor, and had much greater powers than the proconsuls. Such were Cyrenius, Lat. Quirinus, Luke 2. 2, and Vitellius, Jos. Ant. 18. 4. 2. For a list of all the presidents of Syria in that age, see Bibl. Repos. II. p. 381.—In all these provinces, of both kinds, there was, besides the president, an officer called procurator Cæsaris, who had charge of the revenue, and also had a judicial power in matters pertaining to the revenue; they were chosen usually from the Equites, but occasionally were freedmen. Sometimes a procurator discharged the office of a governor or president, especially in a small province, or in a portion of a large province where the president could not reside: as did Pilate, who was procurator of Judea, which was annexed to the province of Syria, Suet. Vesp. 4. Tacit. Ann. 12. 23. Hence he had the power of punishing capitally, which the procurators did not usually possess, ib. 15. 4. ib. 4. 15. So also Felix, Festus, and the other procurators of Judæa; for a list of whom see Bibl. Repos. II. p. 382. See Adam's Rom. Ant. p. 165 sq. Jahn § 241. Krebs. Obss. e Jos. p. 61 sq.—Hence spoken

1. Herod, surnamed the Great, Matt. 2. 1, 3, 7, 12, 13, 15, 16, 19, 22. Luke 1. 5. He was the son of Antipater, an Idumæan in high favour with Julius Cæsar, and at the age of fifteen was made procurator of Galilee, in which he was confirmed by Antony with the title of tetrarch, about B. C. 41. Being driven out by the opposite faction, he fled to Rome, where, by the influence of Antony, he was declared king of Judæa; he now collected an army, recovered Jerusalem, and extirpated the Maccabæan family, B.C. 37. After the battle of Actium he joined the party of Octavius, who confirmed him in his possessions. He now rebuilt and decorated the temple of Jerusalem, built and enlarged many cities, especially Cæsarea, and erected theatres and gymnasia in both these places. He was notorious for his jealousy and cruelty, having put to death his own wife Mariamne, and her two sons, Alexander and Aristobulus. He died A.D. 2, aged 70 years, after a reign of about 40 years as king. See Jos. Ant. 14. c. 9 sq. 15. c. 6 sq. 16. c. 5 sq. et al. Jos. B. J. lib. 1 passim. — It was near the close of his life that Jesus was born, and the massacre of infants took place in Bethlehem, Matt. 2. 16, comp. Macrob. Saturn. 2. 4. At Herod's death, half his kingdom, viz. Idumæa, Judea, and Samaria, was given by Augustus to his son Archelaus with the title of ethnarch, see in Ἀρχέλαος,—the remaining half being divided between two of his other sons, Herod Antipas and Philip, with the title of tetrarchs, Jos. Ant. 18. 5. 1, the former having Galilee and Peræa, and the latter Batanea, Trachonitis, and Auranitis (now Haouran). Luke 3. 1. Jos. Ant. 17. 11. 4.

2. Herod Antipas, Ἀντίπας, often called Herod the tetrarch, Matt. 14. 1, 3, 6 bis. Mark 6. 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22: 8. 15. Luke 3. 1, 19 bis: 8. 3: 9. 7, 9: 13. 31: 23. 7 bis, 8, 11, 12, 15. Acts 4. 27: 13. 1. He was the son of Herod the Great by Malthace, and own brother to Archelaus, Jos. Ant. 17. 1. 3. After his father's death, Augustus gave him Galilee and Peræa, with the title of tetrarch, Luke 3. 1, comp. above; whence also he is called by the very general title βασιλεύς Matt. 14. 9. Mark 6. 14. comp. in Βασιλεύς b. He first married a daughter of Aretas, whom he dismissed on becoming enamoured of Herodias; see in Ἀρέτας. This latter, his own niece and the wife of his brother Philip Herod, he induced to leave her husband and live with him; and it was for his bold remonstrance on this occasion that John the Baptist was put to death through the arts of Herodias. (Mark 6. 17 sq. al.) Herod went to Rome, at the instigation of Herodias, to ask for the title and rank of king; but was there accused before Caligula, at the instance of Herod Agrippa, her own brother, and banished with her to Lugdunum (Lyons) in Gaul, about A.D. 41. His territories were given to Herod Agrippa. Jos. Ant. 18. c. 5. c. 7. — In Mark 8. 15 Ἡρῴδης is put collectively for Ἡρωδιανοί q. v.

3. Herod Agrippa, the elder, called by Josephus only Ἀγρίππας, Acts 12. 1, 6, 11, 19, 20, 21: 23. 35. He was grandson of Herod the Great and Mariamne, and son of Aristobulus. On the accession of Caligula he received with the title of king the provinces which had belonged to his uncle Philip and to Lysanias, see above in no. 1, and in Ἀβιληνή. To these were added those of Herod Antipas, see in no. 2; and Claudias afterwards gave him in A. D. 43 all those parts of Judea and Samaria which had belonged to Herod the Great. He died suddenly and miserably at Cesarea, A. D. 44. Acts 12. 21. Jos. Ant. 18. c. 5 sq. 19. c. 4 sq.

4. Herod Agrippa, the younger, called in N. T. and by Josephus only Agrippa, Ἀγρίππας, Acts 25. 13, 22, 23, 24, 26: 26. 1, 2, 7, 19, 27, 28, 32. He was the son of the elder Herod Agrippa, and at his father's death received from Claudius the kingdom of Chalcis, which had belonged to his uncle Herod, he being then 17 years old. In A. D. 53 he was transferred with the title of king to the provinces which his father at first possessed, viz. Batanea, Trachonitis, Auranitis, and Abilene, to

c) Heb. מָוֶת and Sept. θάνατος often have the sense of destruction, perdition, misery, implying both physical death and exclusion from the presence and favour of God, in consequence of sin and disobedience, opp. to חַיִּים Sept. ζωή life and happiness; so Deut. 30. 19: Prov. 11. 19: 12. 28. Is. 25. 8. Ps. 16. 11 comp. Acts 2. 28. In N. T. this notion is applied with more definiteness to the gospel scheme; and as ζωή is used to denote the bliss and glory of the kingdom of God, including the idea of a joyful resurrection, (see Ζωή c. β,) so θάνατος is put for the opposite, viz. rejection from the kingdom of God, including the idea of physical death as aggravated by eternal condemnation; the idea of physical death being sometimes more prominent, and sometimes that of subsequent perdition. 18. 23. 2 Macc. 12. 16. A form of the later Greek, Lob. on Phr. p. 7.

Θέλω and Ἐθέλω, (f. θελήσω,) both forms being used alike by the Attics, though not indiscriminately; for the distinction see Passow in θέλω and ἐθέλω; and Lobeck on Phryn. p. 7.—To will, to wish, to desire, pr. implying active volition and purpose, and thus differing from βούλομαι, see in Βούλομαι init.

a) pr. TO WILL, i. e. to have in mind, to purpose, to intend, to please, [or chuse] viz. (α) of God and Christ, foll. by infin. aor. Rom. 9. 22 εἰ δὲ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς ἐνδείξασθαι κ. τ. λ. Col. 1. 27. Matt. 2. 18 οὐκ ἤθελε παρακληθῆναι. Mark 6. 26. Luke 15. 28. al. with inf. pres. John 7. 1. 2 Thess. 3. 10. absol. with inf. impl. Matt. 18. 30: 21. 29. Rom. 7. 15 sq. —Palæph. 2. 6. Xen. Winer § 65. 6.—Further, with a negative the idea of θέλω sometimes approaches that of δύναμαι, to be able, I can, e. g. Matt. 1. 19 μὴ θέλων αὐτὴν παραδειγματίσαι, being unwilling, unable, i. e. not being able to bring himself to do so and so. Luke 18. 13 οὐκ ἤθελεν οὐδὲ τοὺς ὀφθ. ἐπᾶραι, 'would not, could not, dared not.' Comp. Passow in ἐθέλω. Schæf. in Greg. Cor. p. 135. —Hom. Il. 13. 106. Xen. Cyr. 8. 1. 16. H. b) genr. TO WISH, to desire, to choose, foll. by inf. e. g. aor. Luke 8. 20 ἰδεῖν σε θέλοντες. 23. 8. with inf. pres. John 16. 19. Gal. 4. 20. foll. by infin. and accus. Mark 7. 24. 1 Cor. 7. 7: 11. 3: 14. 5. (Hdian. 1. 2. 3.) absol. with inf. impl. Matt. 15. 28 γενηθήτω σοι ὡς θέλεις. Mark 9. 13. John 15. 7. 1 Cor. 4. 21. (Palæph. 28. 3.) So with neg. οὐ θέλω, to will not, to be unwilling, to choose not, foll. by infin. aor. Luke 19. 14 οὐ θέλομεν τοῦτον βασιλεῦσαι ἐφ' ἡμᾶς. 1 Cor. 10. 20. (Palæph. 39. 3.) with inf. pres. Rom. 1. 13. 1 Cor. 10. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 8. (Luc. D. Mort. 2. 1 ult.) absol. with inf. impl. John 21. 18.—Foll. by εἰ, Luke 12. 49 τί θέλω, εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη; sometimes with an accus. simply, where however an infin. is strictly implied, e. g. Luke 5. 39 οὐδεὶς πιὼν παλαιὸν, εὐθέως θέλει νέον sc. πίνειν. 2 Cor. 11. 12 τῶν θελόντων ἀφορμήν sc. εὑρεῖν.—Foll. by ἵνα with subjunct. Matt. 7. 12 ὅσα ἂν θέλητε ἵνα ποιῶσιν ὑμῖν οἱ ἄνθρ. Mark 6. 25. John 17. 24. So in interrogations, foll. by fut. indic., or more properly aor. subjunct. pr. with ἵνα implied; e. g. Matt. 20. 32 τί θέλετε [ἵνα] ποιήσω ὑμῖν; as in Engl. what will ye [that] I should do unto you? 26. 17. Mark 14. 12: 15. 9, 12. Luke 9. 54. al. (Anacr. 12. 1. Soph. Œd. R. 651. with fut. Luc. Navig. 4 et 26.) Once with ἤ, in the sense to choose rather, to prefer, 1 Cor. 14. 19, see in Ἤ 3. a.—Sometimes ἐθέλειν (but not θέλειν) when followed by an infin. is to be rendered as an adverb before a finite verb, willingly, gladly, as John 6. 21 ἤθελον οὖν λαβεῖν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, they gladly received him into the vessel. See Buttm. § 150. p. 440. Winer § 58. 4.—Xen. Hi. 7. 9. Cyr. 1. 1. 3. ib. 5. 1. 20.

accus. as being synonymous with φιλέω. But this is better referred to Hebraism, comp. Winer § 58. 4. So by Hebraism with accus. d) by impl. to be so and so minded, to be of opinion, to affirm. 2 Pet. 3. 5 λανθάνει γὰρ αὐτοὺς τοῦτο θέλοντας, for it escapes them who affirm this, who are thus minded, comp. v. 4.—Hdian. 5. 3. 11 εἰκόνα τε ἥλιον ἀνέργαστον εἶναι θέλουσιν. ib. 5. 6. 10. So volo Cic. Acad. 4, 14.

e) θέλω with infin. is sometimes nearly equiv. to μέλλω, to be about to, i. e. it serves merely as an auxiliary, and gives to the infin. a future sense, but only of inanimate things, e. g. Acts 2. 12, & 17. 20 τί ἂν θέλοι τοῦτο εἶναι; what then will this be? or as in comm. Eng. 'what is this going to be?'—Hdot. 1. 78, 109. ib. 2. 11, 14. See Schweigh. Lex. Herod. in ἐθέλω. The first or outer court or enclosure, περίβολος, which was also the lowest, and surrounded the whole Temple, was open for all, and contained the porches, piazzas, where the people collected, and where things and animals pertaining to the sacrifices were bought and sold, and also money exchanged, חֲנֻיוֹת Buxt. Israel or of the priests; it is called by Josephus l. c. ἅγιον, and none but such as were clean were permitted to enter it. Here too the sacrifices were prepared and offered, for here stood the altar of burnt-offerings before the entrance of the ναός, Jos. Ant. 8. 4. 1. ib. 15. 14. 5. comp. Matt. 23. 35. The whole Temple therefore consisted strictly of two parts, ὁ ναός, and τὸ πρόναον or the courts and appurtenances. the Gospels, in Acts, and thrice in Galatians; also in Josephus. Further Ἱεροσόλυμα, ἡ, indec. only Matt. 2. 3: 3. 5, meton. for the inhabitants.—This celebrated city, the capital of Palestine, was the seat of true religion under the Jewish theocracy, and also the chief scene of our Saviour's ministry, and the central point from which his gospel was promulgated. Hence it is often called the Holy City, and among the Arabs of the present day its current name is El Kods, the Holy. It is situated near the middle of Palestine, among the mountains, nearly 40 miles distant from the Mediterranean, and about 25 from the Jordan and Dead Sea. It lay on the confines of Judah and Benjamin, mostly within the limits of the latter, but was reckoned to the former. Its most ancient name was Salem, Heb. שָׁלֵם, Gen. 14. 18. Ps. 76. 3; then Jebus, יְבוּס, as belonging to the Jebusites, Judg. 19. 10, 11. David first reduced it, 2 Sam. 5. 6, 9, and made it the capital of his kingdom, whence it is also called the city of David, עִיר דָּוִד. It was destroyed by the Chaldeans, 2 K. c. 24, 25, but rebuilt by the Jews on their return from exile; and at a later period Herod the Great expended large sums in its embellishment. Jerusalem, as it existed in the age of Christ, is described by Josephus, B. J. 5. 4. 1 sq. The city was built chiefly on three hills: Sion on the south, which was the highest, and contained the citadel, the palace, and the upper city, called by Josephus ἡ ἄνω ἀγορά; Moriah, on which stood the temple, a lower hill on the northeast quarter of Sion, and separated from it by a ravine; Acra, lying north of Sion and covered by ἡ κάτω πόλις, the most considerable portion of the whole city. After the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans about A.D. 70, they endeavoured to root out its very name and nature as a sacred place, from the hearts and memory of the Jewish nation. In A. D. 136 the emperor Adrian caused all the remaining buildings to be demolished, [Qu.? Ed.] and erected a new city, which he called Ælia Capitolina; and it was only in the beginning of the fourth century, after Constantine had embraced Christianity, that the name Jerusalem was again restored. Ἵνα, conjunct. that, construed usually with the Subjunctive, seldom with the Optative, often with the Indicative; pr. τελικῶς or final, as marking the end, purpose, cause for or on account of which any thing is done, TO THE END THAT, IN ORDER THAT, it might or may be so and so; but also ἐκβατικῶς, ecbatic [or eventual] as marking simply the event or result of any action, that in which the action terminates, so THAT it was, is, will be, so and so. Some late writers have denied this ecbatic [eventual] use of ἵνα, e. g. Fritzsche Comm. in Matt. p. 836. Beyer in Winer's Neue krit. Journ. IV. 418. Lehmann ad Lucian. T. I. p. 71. On the other hand it has been amply established by Steudel in Bengel's Neue Archiv. IV. p. 504 sq. and especially by J. A. H. Tittmann De usu Particularum in N. T. subjoined to his work De Synon. in N. T. Lib. II. Lips. 1832. p. 32 sq. translated in Bibl. Repos. for Jan. 1835. See genr. Matth. § 620. Herm. ad Vig. p. 850 sq. p. 556 sq. Winer § 42. p. 237. § 57. p. 382 sq. Still, these two significations are often so nearly related, that the distinction then consists rather in a different mode of conception than in any thing essential.

1. pr. τελικῶς, as marking the final end, purpose, or cause, to the end that, in order that, and ἵνα μή, lit. in order that not, lest.

v. 31.—Aristoph. Vesp. 311, 312. Marc. Antonin. 2. 11 ἡ τῶν ὅλων φύσις οὔτε παρεῖδεν οὔτε ἥμαρτεν . . . . ἵνα τὰ ἀγαθὰ καὶ τὰ κακὰ ἐπίσης τοῖς τε ἀγαθοῖς καὶ τοῖς κακοῖς πεφυρμένως συμβαίνῃ. Agath. Ep. 74 (Anthol. Gr. IV. p. 31) οὔ τις ἀλοιητῆρας ἰδεῖν τέτληκεν ὀδόντας ὑμετέρους, ἵνα σοῖς ἐν μεγάροις πελάσῃ. Here belongs the frequent phrase ἵνα πληρωθῇ ἡ γραφή, τὸ ῥηθέν, etc. used as a formula of quotation, and implying that something took place not in order that a prophecy might be fulfilled, but so that it was fulfilled; not in order TO MAKE the event correspond to the prophecy, but so that the event DID correspond to it. Comp. Tittm. l. c. p. 43, 44. Matt. 1. 22 τοῦτο δὲ ὅλον γέγονεν, ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθέν. 2. 15: 21. 4: 26. 56. John 15. 25. al. With a past tense implied, Mark 14. 49. John 13. 18. al. See in Πληρόω.

3. In the later Greek, ἵνα, in various constructions, lost the power of marking either purpose or event, and became simply a demonstrative conjunction, like our that, i. e. merely pointing out that to which the preceding words refer, or introducing something already implied in the preceding words. In this way ἵνα with Subjunct. came often to be employed, where earlier writers used the infinitive or other particles, e. g.

(now El Sheriat, i. e. the Ford,) the largest and most celebrated river of Palestine. It takes its rise not far from the village Paneas or Banias, near Cæsarea Philippi, and is joined by another stream which rises in the higher parts of the adjacent Antilibanus. After a course of about 15 miles, it passes through the lake or marsh of Merom, or Samochon, and after flowing about the same distance further falls into the lake of Tiberias or sea of Galilee. Leaving this lake, it flows through a fertile valley of considerable width into the Dead Sea, receiving in its course some minor streams. The great valley of the Jordan has been ascertained by Burckhardt to be continued from the Dead Sea to the eastern branch of the Arabian Gulf or Red Sea; so that it is highly probable that the Jordan originally pursued its course to that gulf, until the convulsions which destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, and the subsequent filling up of the bottom of the valley by the drifting sand, caused the stoppage of its waters.—Between the two large lakes, the average breadth of the Jordan is from 60 to 80 feet, and its depth about 10 or 12. It has double banks, i. e. those of its usual channel, and others at the distance of 40 or 50 rods on each side. The low ground within the higher banks is overgrown with reeds and trees, affording a covert for numerous wild beasts. The stream of the Jordan is rapid, and its waters turbid. It is subject to floods, which sometimes, though not often, rise above its usual channel and overflow the space within its higher banks. Matt. 3. 5, 6, 13: 4. 15, 25: 19. 1. Ἰουδαία, ας, ἡ, (pr. fem. of Ἰουδαῖος, supp. γῆ,) Judæa, Heb. יְהוּדָה Judah, pr. n. strictly of the territory of the tribe of Judah, but usually employed in a more extended sense. Under David it denoted the territories of Judah and Benjamin, Josh. 11. 21 comp. v. 16. 2 Sam. 5. 5. 1 Chr. 21. 5. So after the secession of the Ten tribes, it was applied to the dominions of the kingdom of Judah, in distinction from that of Israel, and of course included the whole southern part of Palestine. After the captivity, as most of the exiles who returned were of the kingdom of Judah, the name Judæa (Judah) was given generally to the whole of Palestine west of the Jordan, Hag. 1. 1, 14: 2. 2. Under the Romans, in the time of Christ, Palestine was divided into Galilee, Samaria, and Judæa, (John 4. 4, 5,) which last included the whole southern part west of the Jordan, and constituted a portion of the kingdom of Herod the Great. It then belonged to Archælaus, but was afterwards made a Roman province dependent on Syria, and governed by Procurators, see in Ἡγεμών. For a time also portions of it belonged to Herod Agrippa the elder, comp. in Ἡρῴδης no. 3. See Jos. B. J. 3. 3. 5. Relandi Palæst. p. 31, 174, 178. Jahn § 25. Rosenm. Bibl. Geogr. c) of time, eq. to when, Acts 7. 17 καθὼς δὲ ἤγγιζεν ὁ χρόνος.—2 Macc. 1. 31. Al.

Καί copulative conjunction, and or also, a particle which occurs perhaps more frequently than any other word in the Greek language. Its significations have been unnecessarily multiplied, and may properly be reduced to the two above given. [The others may be said to be uses, not senses. Ed.] See Passow in Καί. Winer § 57. 2 sq. Buttm. § 149. p. 424. Matth. § 620.

1. And, [as] copulative. a) as simply joining single words and clauses, e. g. [as] nouns, Matt. 2. 11 χρυσὸν καὶ λίβανον καὶ σμύρναν. 13. 55 : 23. 6, 7. Luke 6. 38; and so when the latter noun is in place of a genitive, by Hendiadys, Acts 23. 6 περὶ ἐλπίδος καὶ ἀναστάσεως. Rom. 2. 20. (Sept. Gen. 1. 14 : 3. 16.) Pronouns, Matt. 8. 29 τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί, see in Ἐγώ c. Adj. Rom. 7. 12 ἡ ἐντολὴ ἁγία καὶ δικαία καὶ ἀγαθή. Verbs, Mark 4. 27 καθεύδῃ καὶ ἐγείρηται . . . . βλαστάνῃ καὶ μηκύνηται. Acts 1. 21 : 7. 17 : 9. 28; and so where one verb is taken adverbially, Luke 6. 48 ἔσκαψε καὶ ἐβάθυνε, see in Βαθύνω. Rom. 10. 20. al. Adv. Heb. 1. 1 πολυμερῶς καὶ πολυτρόπως. So clauses, Matt. 7. 25 καὶ κατέβη ἡ βροχὴ, καὶ ἦλθον οἱ ποταμοὶ, καὶ ἔπνευσαν οἱ ἄνεμοι, κ. τ. λ. Matt. 1. 17. John 1. 1. Rom. 14. 7. al.—Hence καί is mostly a simple continuative, marking the progress of a continued discourse, e. g. Matt. 1. 23 ἐν γαστρὶ ἕξει, καὶ τέξεται υἱὸν, καὶ καλέσουσι κ. τ. λ. 2. 11. Mark 4. 32. Luke 2. 34 : 11. 44. 1 Cor. 12. 5, 6. al.—Hdian. 3. 12. 5. Xen An. 4. 1. 15 sq.—So as connecting negative clauses, where the negative particle may be omitted in the latter, which is then rendered negative by the continuative power of καί, e. g. James 3. 14 μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε καὶ ψεύδεσθε κ. τ. λ. 2 Cor. 12. 21. comp. Matt. 13. 15. Mark 4. 12. John 12. 40. Acts 28. 27. See Winer § 59. 6. p. 413. Passow in καί no. 13. (Jos. Ant. 2. 15. 5 init.) But in two examples after οὔτε, the καί does not thus carry forward the negative, as John 4. 11 οὔτε ἄντλημα ἔχεις, καὶ τὸ φρέαρ ἐστὶ βαθύ. 3 John 10. —Luc. Dial. D. Mar. 14. 1 οὔτε τὴν παῖδα ἠδίκησεν, καὶ αὐτὸ ἤδη τέθνηκε. See Winer l. c. p. 412.—The use of καί in this continuative sense takes a strong colouring, in the N. T. from the Heb. use of ו, espec. ו conversive both of fut. and præt. which is also continuative, see Gesen. Lex. arts. ו and הִנֵּה. Lehrg. § 88. Ewald Heb. Gr. p. 547. Hence the simple καί is put very frequently in N. T., particularly in the narrative style. where the Classical writers either put nothing, or use some other particle, as δέ, ἀλλά, τότε, and the like. So espec. in Matt., Mark, Luke, and Rev. e. g. Matt. 14. 9. sq. 27. 28 sq. Mark 1. 31. sq. 3. 13 sq. Luke 2. 25 sq. 4. 14 sq. Rev. 11. 7 sq. al. sæp. Comp. ו and Sept. καί 1 Sam. 15. 3 sq. Is. 11. 12 sq. Ez. 5. 1 sq. comp. 1 Macc. 1. 1. sq.

b) as continuative in respect to time, i. e. connecting clauses and sentences in the order of time, viz. (α) At the beginning of a sentence, where any thing is narrated as done immediately, or soon after that which the preceding context narrates. Here καί is equivalent to the more usual τότε, then, after that, Matt. 3. 16: 4. 3, 21 καὶ προβὰς ἐκεῖθεν. 10. 1: 14. 12, 14. Mark 1. 29: 4. 21, 24, 26. al. comp. τότε Matt. 15. 12.—Xen. Hi. 1. 8. Cyr. 1. 3. 11. An. 4. 1. 11. Hom. Il. 1. 92.—Here belongs the form καὶ ἐγένετο, then it came to pass, corresponding to the Heb. וַיְהִי, see Gesen. Lex. art. הִנֵּה. Ewald Heb. Gr. p. 525. sq. Usually with a notation of time, e. g. by ὅτε Matt. 7. 28: 10. 1: 19. 1. ὡς Luke 2. 15. ἐν with dat. Mark 1. 9: 4. 4. Luke 1. 59: 9. 18: 14. 1. al. μετά Luke 2. 46. foll. by genit. absol. Matt. 9. 10. by acc. and inf. Mark 2. 23. Elsewhere ἐγένετο δέ id. Luke 3. 21: 5. 1: 6. 1.—(β) In the apodosis; e. g. where any thing is said to follow at once, immediately upon that which is contained in the protasis; equiv. to and immediately, Mark 1. 27 τοῖς πνεύμ. ἀκαθ. ἐπιτάσσει καὶ ὑπακούουσιν αὐτῷ. Luke 8. 25. Matt. 8. 15. Mark 2. 14. Luke 4. 36. Matt. 26. 53. Also where the time is less definite, equiv. to and then, and afterwards, without any notation of time, Mark 12. 1 καὶ ἐξέδοτο αὐτὸν γεωργοῖς. Luke 1. 56 ἔμεινε δὲ . . . μῆνας τρεῖς, καὶ ὑπέστρεψεν κ. τ. λ. John 4. 40: 6. 58. Acts 5. 7: 7. 7. —Theocr. Id. 7. 10—12. Comp. Passow in καί no. 5.—So, with a notation of time, Matt. 28. 9 ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο . . . . καὶ ἰδοὺ ὁ Ἰησοῦς κ. τ. λ. (Xen. An. 1. 10. 15 ὅτε.) So after καὶ ἐγένετο or ἐγένετο δέ with a note of time, see above in α. Matt. 9. 10 καὶ ἰδού. Mark 2. 15. Luke 5. 1: 2. 15, 21: 9. 28, 51. Spec. in the construction ἤγγικεν ἡ ὥρα καί κ. τ. λ. Matt. 26. 45, and ἦν δὲ ὥρα τρίτη καί κ. τ. λ. Mark 15. 25. Luke 23. 44, where others needlessly take καί as [put] in the place of a relative.—Soph. Œd. R. 710 or 718. c) as continuative in respect to sense; i.e. before the apodosis, and connecting it, as a consequent, with the protasis as its antecedent, viz. (α) where the apodosis affirms what will take place, provided that is done, which is contained in the protasis; equiv. to and so, and thus, and then, usually foll. by fut. or pres. in a future sense. So with imperat. in the protasis, Matt. 4. 19 δεῦτε ὀπίσω μου, καὶ ποιήσω ὑμᾶς ἁλιεῖς ἀνθρώπων. 5. 15: 7. 7: 9. 18 ἐπίθες τὴν χεῖρά σου ἐπ' αὐτὴν, καὶ ζήσεται. 11. 29. Mark 6. 22: 11. 29. Luke 6. 35. T. as Matt. 23. 32. Mark 9. 5: 11. 29. Luke 12. 29: 20. 3. Eph. 4. 26. But in all these καί is simply copulative, without any intensive force, and may be referred to some [one] of the significations above given. παῖδα ἠδίκησεν, καὶ αὐτὸ ἤδη τέθνηκε. See Winer l. c. p. 412.—The use of καί in this continuative sense takes a strong colouring, in the N. T. from the Heb. use of ו, espec. ו conversive both of fut. and præt. which is also continuative, see Gesen. Lex. arts. ו and וַ. Lehrg. § 88. Ewald Heb. Gr. p. 547. Hence the simple καί is put very frequently in N. T., particularly in the narrative style. where the Classical writers either put nothing, or use some other particle, as δέ, ἀλλά, τότε, and the like. So espec. in Matt., Mark, Luke, and Rev. e. g. Matt. 14. 9. sq. 27. 28 sq. Mark 1. 31. sq. 3. 13 sq. Luke 2. 25 sq. 4. 14 sq. Rev. 11. 7 sq. al. sæp. Comp. ו and Sept. καί 1 Sam. 15. 3 sq. Here καί is equivalent to the more usual τότε, then, after that, Matt. 3. 16 : 4. 3, 21 καὶ προβὰς ἐκεῖθεν. 10. 1 : 14. 12, 14. Mark 1. 29 : 4. 21, 24, 26. al. comp. τότε Matt. 15. 12.—Xen. So after καὶ ἐγένετο or ἐγένετο δέ with a note of time, see above in α. Matt. 9. 10 καὶ ἰδού. Mark 2. 15. Luke 5. 1 : 2. 15, 21 : 9. 28, 51. Spec. in the construction ἤγγικεν ἡ ὥρα καί κ. τ. λ. T. as Matt. 23. 32. Mark 9. 5: 11. 29. Luke 12. 29: 20. 3. Eph. 4. 26. But in all these καί is simply copulative, without any intensive force, and may be referred to some [one] of the significations above given. See Winer § 57. 2. note, a. —(ε) Where a part is subjoined to a whole by way of emphasis, καί may be rendered and especially, inprimis. Mark 1. 5: 16. 7 εἴπατε τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ καὶ τῷ Πέτρῳ. 1 Cor. 9. 5. Mark 9. 18 : 14. 55, 56. John 10. 25. al. sæp. Καρχηδών, όνος, ἡ, (pr. name Carthage,) in N. T. a carbuncle, Rev. 21. 19 in Mss. for καλκηδών chalcedony. [Only one Mss. has χαρχηδών, and that, as appears from the Coptic Version, by mistake for χαρκηδών, itself a mere dialectical variation for χαλκηδών; though it was a change likely to be made by half-learned scribes, and has been made on other occasions. See Aristoph. Brunck II. 51. ed. 4to, and Kuster on Aristoph. p. 106 & 116. It is plain that Carthage here can have nothing to do with the New Testament name, whatever that be. Ed.]
